...rms-Free Sinai ...nd Mixed Force

...ONDON, March 12 (AP).—Israeli Premier Golda Meir was ...d today as advocating the demilitarization of the Sinai Pen... ...a in a peace settlement with Egypt. She indicated the thinking ...e Jewish state on its future frontiers in an interview with Louis ...n, deputy editor of the London Times. Mrs. Meir said in the in... ...iew that she would propose a mixed force to guarantee the demili... ...ation of Sinai—a force that must include Israeli troops and could include Egyptians. In the interview, on the front page of the early editions of tomorrow's Times, Mrs. Meir also said there must not be another war in the Middle East and that Israel's agreed frontiers could prevent it.

Mrs. Meir said Egypt must never be allowed to deploy troops, tanks, artillery and missiles in Sinai, which was overrun by the Israelis in the 1967 Mideast war.

Port for Jordan

Nor could Egypt return to the Gaza Strip, she said—"Israel would take care of refugees and Gaza could be a port for Jordan."

The Israeli leader stressed that her country must retain Sharm el-Sheikh, which controls entry to the Tiran Strait, the Golan Heights, of Syria, and Jerusalem, which "would remain united and part of Israel."

Mrs. Meir said she was opposed to the creation of an independent Palestinian state on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

"The final borders between Israel and the West Bank must not divide, but connect Israelis and Arabs," she said.

She predicted a peaceful and prosperous future for Jordan and the West Bank, saying that Israeli "compensation" and international funds could finance its industrialization.

Something There

In the meantime, Mrs. Meir said, the Jordan River must not be open for Arab troops to cross. "Israel must have something there, and perhaps on the heights behind," she added.

The Israeli premier said she was afraid of Soviet missiles being deployed along Israel's southern border. The interviewer quoted her as remarking that the Russian in charge of Moscow's anti-missile defenses is now in Egypt. "He was not there to teach them to grow cotton," she remarked.

Israel's peace proposals, she said, would be a painful solution for Egypt's President Anwar Sadat, "but people had to pay for their misdeeds," she concluded.

U.S. Not Offended

WASHINGTON, March 12.—The State Department declared today it had not been offended by tough language in an Israeli embassy position paper which asserted Israel had no intention of pulling back to its 1967 boundaries in a bid to speed negotiations.

But spokesman Robert J. McCloskey disclosed that Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs Joseph J. Sisco had called Israeli Ambassador Yitzhak Rabin to ask about the Israeli paper.

The New York Times had reported that the State Department was "smarting" at the no-yield stand taken in the Israeli statement, which was circulated widely here among diplomats, congressmen and newsmen.

"We recognize that an embassy has a right to issue a paper and express its opinions," said

Thailand, it said, has granted concessions to five American concerns—Union, Amoco, Gulf, Conoco and Tenneco—but drilling has not yet started.

"According to petroleum geologists, the seismic soundings and other preliminary exploratory work done so far have produced encouraging results, and there are good expectations that oil fields may exist in the Gulf of Thailand," the department wrote Sen. Fulbright.

It said Cambodia has granted a concession to the French oil company Elf-ERAP covering the entire offshore area but no oil has been produced. Here again, it added, the area appears promising.

"We would not speculate at this time about the petroleum potential of the combined Gulf of Siam, South China Sea and Java Sea area since it is generally unexplored and unproven," the department said.

Belfast shipyard workers march to demand government action in the wake of the three soldiers' slaying.

Belfast Protestants, Catholics Join Ranks

7,000 Workers March Together To Protest Soldiers' Killings

BELFAST, March 12 (UPI).—About 7,000 Protestant and Roman Catholic shipyard workers marched today united in anger over the killings of three British soldiers.

Apart from occasional chants of "toughness for terrorists," the workmen from the Harland and Wolf shipyard plodded in a silence almost eerie considering their numbers.

"All shades of opinion are on the march today," said Bill Hull, the demonstrators' spokesman.

The march snarled traffic in downtown Belfast for more than two hours. But no motorist honked as the overall-clad, cloth-capped workers filed by.

Petition Submitted

At the headquarters of Premier Maj. James Chichester-Clark's Unionist party, the workers submitted a petition demanding introduction of internment without trial, re-armament of the police and stern action against the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

"In the name of God and of humanity, act now before it is too late," said Mr. Hull, reading from the petition.

3,000 Troops Alerted

An army spokesman reported today that Belfast had an "unusually quiet night." He said the only incident was a small explosion at a post office which caused minor damage. Another unexploded bomb was also found on the premises, he said.

Elsewhere in the province, an explosion behind the labor exchange at Dungannon, County Tyrone, slightly injured a night watchman.

Meanwhile, Britain alerted an additional 3,000 troops for movement to Northern Ireland in the event of an outbreak of new street warfare.

Detectives seeking the killers of the three soldiers said they had made progress and appealed to the public for further clues. The IRA has denied responsibility for the slayings.

Dispatch of the additional 3,000 men to Northern Ireland would bring to about 11,200 the number of British troops stationed in the province where fighting between Roman Catholics and Protestants has taken the lives of six British soldiers this year.

Troops Under 18 Banned

LONDON, March 12 (AP).—Two days after three British soldiers, two of them teen-agers, were killed in a Belfast ambush, the army tonight banned troops under 18 from serving in Northern Ireland.

Defense Secretary Lord Carrington also ordered the withdrawal of all boys under 18 already among the 8,250 British troops in Northern Ireland. A Defense Ministry announcement said the men will be withdrawn gradually. About 160 soldiers are involved.

Youths of 16 can enlist in Britain's all-professional army but are barred from fighting zones until they reach 18. The British Isles up to now, however, have not been considered an area of active operations.

Full military funerals are to be held in Scotland for the three soldiers slain Wednesday night. Joseph McCaig, 18, and his brother, John, 17, are to be buried side by side at Ayr. Dougal McCaughey, 23, is to be cremated in Glasgow.

Nixon Assails 'New Isolationists', Urges U.S. to Be Strong for Peace

By Carroll Kilpatrick

NEWPORT, R.I., March 12 (WP).—President Nixon today criticized "the new isolationists" who would cut the nation's defenses to the bone and declared that America "must have strength" to prevent future wars.

At the same time, the President said that U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war "is coming to an end" and that the nation's men in uniform will become a "peace force."

Their responsibility will be to keep the peace, he said in addressing the graduating class of the Naval Officer Candidate School here, where his son-in-law David Eisenhower, was one of the 216 graduates.

The President stressed the theme, developed in several recent statements and interviews, that he is pursuing a middle course between the hawks and the doves and that he believes peace can be guaranteed only if the nation maintains a strong defense.

He did not name the "new isolationists," who, he suggested, do not understand "the cost of weakness."

"We know that when force is rewarded, the cost of peace and the only alternative to war will be tyranny," Mr. Nixon said. "This fact dominated the first half of this century. We are determined that it will not dominate the last half.

"For this reason, we have accepted the necessity of war. But our purpose is peace."

If the world were free, he said, there might be no need of arms, but while "the values we cherish" are threatened "we must keep the strength we need to keep the values that we cherish," he said.

Gathered outside one gate of the naval base, where Mr. Nixon spoke, were several hundred protesting construction workers who came to demonstrate their opposition to the President's recent action attempting to hold down wage increases in the building industry. Military police barred them from the base.

Another group of demonstrators, including the auxiliary bishop of the Providence, R.I., Roman Catholic diocese, gathered at a different gate to protest the Indochina war.

Very Proud

When the President landed at Quonset Point Naval Air Station, where he was trained as a naval officer in World War II, he reminisced about his own experience and said he was "very proud" that David was graduating with honors, 17th in his class.

David "has a sense of duty" and he "recognizes the necessity for service" although he is like any other young man who regrets the interruptions of his plans for a career, Mr. Nixon said.

Mrs. Nixon, David's wife, Julie, Tricia Nixon and David's father, John S. Eisenhower, ambassador to Belgium, were on hand for the graduation exercise. Afterwards, they all flew to Key Biscayne, Fla., for the weekend.

After a brief leave, David will report for duty at the Anti-Air Warfare Center, at Virginia Beach, Va. Later, he will be an officer on the USS Albany, a guided missile cruiser, in the Mediterranean.

Saigon Units Pulled Out of Key Position

FIRE SUPPORT BASE DONG DA, Laos, March 12 (Reuters).—South Vietnamese troops today pulled out of a key artillery position near the crossroads town of Sepone, giving up their most forward position in the thrust on the Ho Chi Minh Trail supply lines.

Informed sources said the last troops of two battalions were airlifted out of Fire Support Base Sophia, on a high ridge three miles southeast of Sepone.

The move follows the pullback from Sepone itself after a five-day occupation, apparently because an estimated 6,000 North Vietnamese troops moved into the area under cover of bad weather earlier this week.

[The North Vietnamese have thrown 50,000 men into the battle for the Ho Chi Minh Trail, United Press International reported today from Saigon.

[UPI also reported that two fresh battalions of South Vietnamese infantry were flown in American helicopters to a new, undisclosed operation in Laos. The South Vietnamese said the fresh troops were moved in to keep government forces on hilltop bases in control of any movement in the Sepone Valley area and to maintain the approximately 3,000-man troop level in the area.

[Field reports said North Vietnamese troops have moved in "all around Sepone," but have not launched a major ground attack or tried to enter the town itself, UPI said.]

South Vietnamese sources said that the pullout is a tactical one aimed at avoiding a head-on clash with major North Vietnamese units.

"We are adopting the Communist tactics of hit-and-run because if we stay in one place too long we will get into a lot of trouble," one source said today.

While in the Sepone area, South Vietnamese troops destroyed large ammunition and supply dumps—sometimes calling in U.S. air strikes to do the work after the caches were located.

But the abandonment of Sophia means that the South Vietnamese no longer have an entrenched ground position threatening Sepone, which would have to be controlled until the rainy season begins in May in

Military's Threat Of Coup Topples Turkish Regime

ANKARA, March 12 (Reuters).—The government of Premier Suleiman Demirel resigned today after Turkey's military commanders threatened to take over the country unless a new administration was formed immediately.

A statement from the presidency said that the resignation had been accepted and—in accordance with the constitution—Mr. Demirel had been asked to remain in office until a new administration is formed. Consultations toward formation of a new government were started tonight.

[United Press International reported late tonight that the Ankara public prosecutor announced the arraignment of 23 leaders of the extreme-left Turkish Workers' party on charges of spreading Communist propaganda and activities harmful to the nation's unity.]

[AP reported that the nation, which has a population of 40 million, remained calm.]

[UPI said that travel in and out of the country, via air and at its Greek border, was normal.]

The military ultimatum had come from the nation's top generals following a wave of political agitation and left-wing terrorism against the government.

The premier called an emergency cabinet meeting to discuss the ultimatum, which had been delivered in a message to President Cevdet Sunay and speakers of the Senate and National Assembly. Four hours later Mr. Demirel resigned.

Jeopardy Seen

The ultimatum said that the future of the republic was in jeopardy, brother had been set against brother and neglect of needed reforms was retarding the nation's economic development.

[According to UPI, the note also said that the Demirel government had brought Turkey to the "brink of civil strife and social and economic discontent."

[UPI said that among those listed by the Ankara prosecutor as arraigned was American-educated sociologist Behice Boran, the first woman to head a Turkish political party. Most of her Workers' party executive committee also were reported arraigned.

[The party entered the political arena in 1962 with a platform of Marxian proposals, UPI said. It won 15 parliamentary seats in 1965 but kept only two in the 1969 election. The party has demanded Turkey's withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the creation of a Socialist system in Turkey, UPI said. Among the charges against its leaders was the prosecutor's accusation that it had stirred discontent among Turkey's Kurdish minority.

[UPI said the prosecutor also had applied to the constitutional court for a ban on the extreme-rightist National Order party.]

The armed forces were placed on a state of alert when the military ultimatum was broadcast over the state radio this morning.

Reliable sources said that troops took up positions outside the state radio building and military leaders rejected a suggestion by President Sunay that three days' grace should be given for the formation of a new regime.

The ultimatum was drawn up by the chief of the general staff, Gen. Memduh Tagmac, and was also signed by the commanders of the army, navy and air force.

An official government spokesman said tonight that a new government would be formed within the framework of normal democratic processes.

The military commanders' statement called for the institution of reforms envisioned in the constitution drawn up before the military handed democracy back to the country after its 1960 military coup against the Adnan Menderes regime.

The ultimatum said that the government had failed to provide necessary reforms and parliament had also failed in its task.

The military leaders said they were convinced that these failures and the present security situation had placed the nation's future in danger.

They said that Turkey should have a new government which inspired confidence that it was capable of dealing with the present situation.

Outbreaks by extremist students have claimed at least 18 lives during the last two and a half years. Scores of people have been injured in campus and street battles. Foreign property has been bombed and banks robbed.

The military leaders were obviously disturbed by the kidnapping last week of four American airmen—later released—and by a gun battle between students and gendarmes searching for the men. At least two persons died and 20 were injured in the battle.

For 500,000-Franc Ransom

Kidnappers Yield Daughter Of Head of BP in France

PARIS, March 12 (AP).—The 21-year-old daughter of the head of British Petroleum in France, kidnapped Monday night, has been returned to her family after payment of a ransom of 500,000 francs, police said tonight.

The police had clamped a nationwide embargo on news of the kidnapping of Elisabeth Chenevier, fearing she might be killed if the kidnappers were scared by publicity on the case.

The kidnappers first asked her father, Jean Chenevier, for five million francs, but he managed to talk them down.

AP.

Jean Chenevier

Police said she returned to her sister's Paris apartment, where her father was waiting, late tonight and appeared in "excellent health."

The kidnappers "are in flight," police said.

The ransom was paid at 9:30 last night near a city subway station. Police sources said several persons were involved in a complicated plan involving several cars, to dispose of the briefcase containing the ransom money. Police were unable to intervene in the sequence of operations, the sources said.

Seized in Basement

Miss Chenevier apparently was picked up by the kidnappers in the basement garage of her sister's apartment block when she returned from a regular weekly choir practice to dine with her sister.

The sister raised the alarm Tuesday morning. Already worried about Elisabeth's failure to appear Monday night, she found her car in the garage with the keys still in it.

Their mother found a letter in the Tuesday morning mail demanding the ransom and complete silence. The kidnappers telephoned Mr. Chenevier at his office that day, the amount of the ransom was reduced and the delivery procedure set up.

Chance for Gaullists

A Million Frenchmen Running In General Municipal Election

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, March 12.—More than a million Frenchmen will be running for local office Sunday in the first general elections since the Gaullist landslide of 1968. Of the million candidates—one for every 50 Frenchmen and for every 30 voters—almost half will be elected to serve on municipal councils.

They are the first municipal elections since 1965, the first general elections under President Georges Pompidou and nobody agrees on what they mean. The numbers alone show that this is direct democracy carried almost to Athenian proportions, but they also show that such councils could not possibly be vested with much power.

For France's dominant party, the Gaullists, these elections offer a chance to put down roots on the local level where the Gaullist plant never has thrived. Gaullism, because of the general, always has been a head without a trunk, and now the problem is to see that the rest of the body grows properly. To survive, Gaullism needs a base, local support, an apparatus, a machine.

But the majority of the 37,600 communes scattered across this demographically dispersed country have been historically alien to Gaullist republicanism. These were the villages and towns ruled by the notables, the local Establishment, which feared and resented Paris and nationalism. These were the Girondins opposing the Jacobin centralists and the Petainists opposing the obscure brigadier general and his calls to honor.

Fortunately for the Gaullists and the majority, the opposition, historically strong in the provinces, now is horribly divided. The tickets that voters will be invited to approve Sunday show strange combinations, with socialists sometimes aligned with centrists and sometimes with Communists. The future of the French opposition at least should be clearer after this election, for the non-Communist left will be able to judge which alliances paid off, and if its future lies in a new agreement with the Communist party or if the party should be sent back to the ghetto.

French democracy really is only two-tiered. There are the 37,600 municipal councils, little ones for the villages and big ones for the cities, and there is Paris. The balance of power always has favored Paris for the funds come from Paris and so does the prefect, the area governor. All those things which in a federal country are done locally—roads, schools, public works, building requirements—in France need the stamp of Paris and the prefect.

It is possible, however, for the municipal councils and the mayors they elect to achieve a certain degree of independence and notoriety. This has happened in Lyons, Grenoble and Marseilles, cities big enough and rich enough to partially escape the Paris tutelage. They have managed this largely through manipulation of the patente, a local licensing tax on business and industry which along with a property tax provides the community with its only source of income aside from what comes from Paris.

Faults Are Obvious

The faults of the system are obvious. Whatever party controls Paris will be tempted to favor those communities controlled by the same party. A kind of election blackmail is created whereby a local party can claim that Paris will cut off local funds if the right party isn't elected.

This unhealthy and over-centralized situation has given rise to various schemes for regionalization, which is what cost Gen. de Gaulle his job. Every French politician has an idea how this should be done, but the essence of what is needed was embodied in Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas's plan to "decentralize down to the community level and then regroup the communities." These new "regions" would become recipients of tax resources from Paris which in Edgar Faure's words they could "spend as they like" (which they now cannot).

Unfortunately, the Chaban-Delmas plan was vetoed at the Elysée. Gaullist Jacobin Alexandre Sanguinetti explained Mr. Pompidou's veto when he said: "We found ourselves confronted with an attempt to replace centralized Gaullist power with regional power."

Still, even the Elysée recognizes the need to do something and it is likely that Sunday's municipals are the last as they are now known. France simply has gotten too big to be run from Paris especially when it has begun to be recognized here that the best decisions are often those made at the lowest level. Statistically, the French national budget represents 21 percent of French GNP compared to comparable percentages of 10 percent and 14.6 percent in the United States and West Germany.

The Gaullists have been playing down these elections as though they didn't expect to do well. Starting from such a low base, however, (the Gaullist party controls only 27 of 192 cities with more than 30,000 poulation) they should certainly increase their score. It is more likely the downgrading of the municipals is based on Mr. Pompidou's conception of a strict separation between local interests and what he calls national prerogatives. In other words, he doesn't want the mayors calling him up to discuss foreign policy.

In any case, all the Gaullist stars will be on the line, showing that despite the poor-mouthing they would like to win. It is French tradition that national figures also hold local office, and after years of having their way in Paris the Gaullists hope that after Sunday's elections things will look better in the provinces.

Labor Law Takes Effect In Sweden

STOCKHOLM, March 12 (Reuters).—Sweden's worst bout of labor troubles since World War II should end at midnight tonight when emergency powers banning all strikes and lockouts become effective.

The legislation, formally approved by King Gustav VI Adolph and the cabinet today after being rushed through parliament yesterday, will end a 33-day labor dispute which has disrupted Sweden's public life.

The truce put into effect by the law will last six weeks and will give 47,000 civil servants time to negotiate pay settlements.

Three-quarters of the strikers, who were locked out by the government, have already been allowed back to work in anticipation of the new law.

The remaining 12,000, who include half the nation's harbor pilots, welfare workers, public prosecutors and court officials and 600 railroad employees who stopped rail services for over a month, will return to work over the weekend or Monday.

The emergency law is the first example of direct government intervention in a labor dispute. Sweden's wage bargaining methods heretofore have been considered a model of sophistication.

The law has brought accusations of authoritarianism from labor unions and some opposition newspapers who fear a turning point in freedom of labor action.

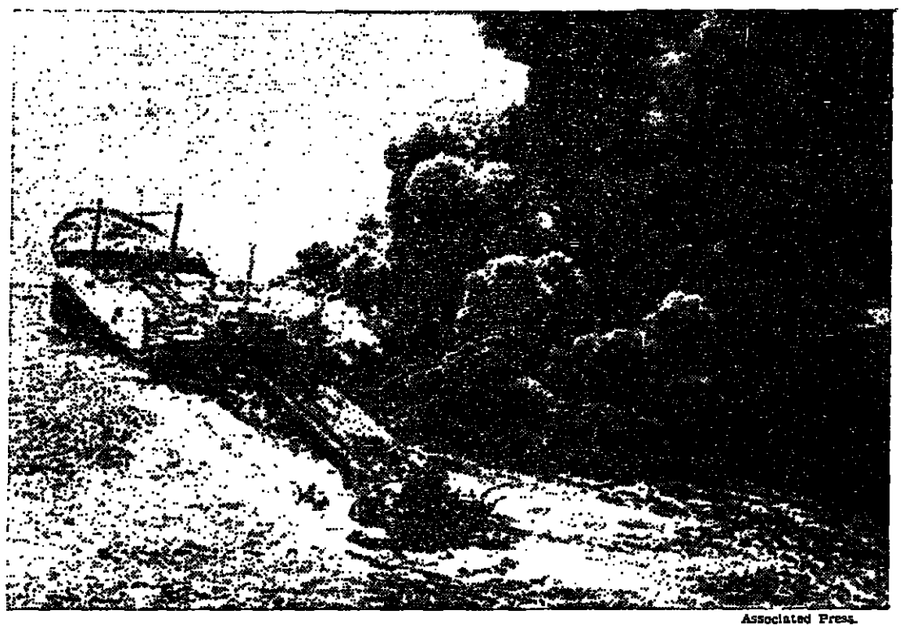

The two civil servant unions involved, whose funds have been severely depleted by the dispute, have said there will be neither money nor momentum to revive strike action when the new law expires April 23.

One union and a civil service organization not directly involved in the dispute have broken off all wage negotiations for now in protest at the government measure.

Cairo Crowds in Frenzy At Primate's Funeral

CAIRO, March 12 (Reuters).—Police reinforcements were rushed to the funeral here today of the Coptic Orthodox patriarch, Pope Kyrillos VI, as frenzied crowds surged forward to touch the coffin of the 69-year-old primate, who died on Tuesday.

Mourners had gathered at the new Coptic cathedral throughout the day. President Anwar Sadat was represented by Premier Mahmoud Fawzi, while Emperor Haile Selassie sent his imperial court minister. The Vatican was represented by the Most Rev. Bruno Heim.

S. African Bombs Sink Crippled Oil Tanker

CAPE TOWN, March 12 (Reuters).—A South African Air Force plane today sank the blazing Liberian tanker Wafra 200 miles off Cape Agulhas, at Africa's southernmost tip.

The air force had been ordered to sink the crippled vessel whose leaking cargo of 40,000 tons of oil had started polluting beaches.

The 28,339-ton ship vanished beneath the waves after a third attack by air force planes.

The Wafra had been aground since Feb. 28 on a reef, six miles offshore, and had spewed oil over stretches of the Cape coastline. It was towed to the open sea to be destroyed.

Two earlier attacks—by rocket-firing Buccaneer jets and Shackletons carrying depth charges—failed to sink the tanker.

Today's successful attack was made by another Shackleton, a four-engine prop-driven airplane which sent her to the bottom with nine depth charges.

"The instructions were to hit her forward and to create a situation where she would slowly sink with the oil in her tanks," a government spokesman said.

The depth-charge attacks were aimed at hastening the sinking without breaking up the tanker, he explained.

New Violence Jolts Milan, Turin Plants

ROME, March 12 (AP).—More than 200,000 state employees returned to work today but there was a wave of violence in factories throughout Italy.

The state workers ended a three-day strike 24 hours ahead of schedule after getting government assurances of action on their demands for higher pay and faster promotions. The walkout, the second this month, had closed 1,000 free medical clinics around the country.

Violent incidents in Milan and Turin were protested by Renato Lombardi, president of the Italian Manufacturers' Association. In a telegram to Premier Emilio Colombo, he denounced "episodes that have violently upset the productive activity of the factories."

Police reported that they found and disarmed a bomb at the Faema appliance factory in Milan, where there have been labor troubles. Investigators said that the device could have caused many deaths if it had exploded.

Fight at Factory

Leftist workers burst into an office of the Phillips electric appliance factory in Milan and a fight broke out.

In Turin, the big Fiat automobile factory suspended 25 workers accused of staging a strike on the assembly line.

The Autobianchi car plant in Milan announced that it would reopen tomorrow after the government got assurances from striking workers that they would not block new vehicles leaving the factory. The company had laid off its 4,000 workers earlier this week, charging that labor violence made it impossible for the plant to stay open.

Ruling Ousts U.S. Promoter

Judge Names Public Receiver To Manage Beatles' Assets

By John M. Lee

LONDON, March 12 (NYT).—Paul McCartney won the first round today in his battle to dissolve the Beatles' partnership when a High Court judge appointed a public receiver to manage the pop group's assets.

The ruling ousts the American promoter, Allen Klein, and his company, Abkco Industries, Inc., as the Beatles' manager.

However, the appointment of the receiver and manager was stayed, or postponed, for seven days pending a possible appeal by the other Beatles: John Lennon, George Harrison and Ringo Starr, who have opposed McCartney's action. The lawyer for the three men said that no decision had been made.

None of the Beatles nor Mr. Klein was in the London courtroom to hear the two-hour judgment.

The judge, Sir Blanshard Stamp, said that there had been no evidence that Mr. Klein had put or would put money from the Beatles' partnership into his own pocket. But he said that McCartney's mistrust was justified in view of Mr. Klein's dealings with an American company, Cameo Parkway, Inc., and his conviction in New York on income tax charges, even though the conviction is being appealed.

McCartney had sought the appointment of a receiver to protect his interests until his suit for legal dissolution of the group is heard later this year. The court named James D. Spooner, a London accountant, to the post.

Sir Blanshard said that the controversy centered on the personality and activities of Mr. Klein, a flamboyant man of 32.

Three of the Beatles attributed the substantial increase in their income to Mr. Klein's efforts and wanted to continue his employment, the judge said, but McCartney had never signed the document making Mr. Klein's company the manager of the Beatles and did not consider himself bound by it. McCartney wanted his wife's father, Lee Eastman, to manage his financial affairs.

Sir Blanshard said that he was satisfied that Abkco had received commissions "grossly in excess" of that specified in its appointment. But he said that this had apparently been arranged in a later agreement between Mr. Klein and three of the Beatles without reference to McCartney. The judge suggested the other Beatles might have committed "a grave breach of their duties as partners."

The Beatles have not performed as a group since the summer of 1969 when they recorded their last album, "Abbey Road." Lennon announced that he was leaving the group that September, and early in 1970 McCartney also left.

However, the Beatles have since made individual records. George Harrison's "My Sweet Lord" and Paul McCartney's "Another Day" are both near the top of the British charts of the most popular records. There is a dispute whether these are partnership assets.

"If they are," Sir Blanshard said, "one is left with the odd situation where four performers are exercising separate skills for the partnership. There will inevitably be varying degrees of skill and success and differing proportions of assets going into the partnership."

Then in a comment foreshadowing the final decision, he said, "It is arguable that, for those reasons alone, to refuse to dissolve this partnership would be intolerable." The Beatles partnership is organized through the company known as Apple Corps.

"I am satisfied on the accounts that the financial situation is confused, uncertain and inconclusive," the judge said. "A receiver is, in my judgment, needed not merely to secure the assets but to see that there will be a firm hand to manage the business fairly as between partners and produce order."

Berlin Parleys Stalemated; Easter Visits Still Possible

By Ellen Lentz

BERLIN, March 12 (NYT).—East-West German negotiators failed today to reach the expected agreement on wall-crossing passes for West Berliners during the Easter holiday. But officials stressed that the negative result meant no final breakdown of the complex undertaking.

Mayor Klaus Schuetz of West Berlin told newsmen after the four-hour session that East Germany, in the absence of an agreement, might make a unilateral move to open the border for the holiday week in April. West Berliners are normally barred entering the eastern half of the city.

For Mr. Schuetz, the outcome was seen as a disappointment since he is facing a state election on Sunday in which a successful pass arrangement might have swung undecided voters into his camp. The mayor is fighting to retain an absolute majority for his party, the Social Democrats, who have been in power in the city for the last 16 years.

Mr. Schuetz said that his chief negotiator, Ulrich Mueller, told the East Germans that the West Berlin officials were not competent to discuss a permanent visiting arrangement proposed by the Communist government in East Berlin.

After the session, the Communists accused the mayor of "hiding behind the back of the allies." ADN, the official East German press service, said that the city government failed to respond to the East German offer "with a concrete answer or a factual counterproposal."

Canada Kidnap Case to Jury

MONTREAL, March 12 (UPI).—The murder trial of Paul Rose, first of those brought on by Canada's "kidnap crisis," went to the jury today with the judge instructing the jurors they must either find Mr. Rose guilty as charged or set him free.

Mr. Rose, 27, is one of four men charged with the kidnap-murder of Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Laporte by the terrorist Quebec Liberation Front (FLQ), which wants independence for French-speaking Quebec province.

Judge Marcel Nichols, who clashed repeatedly with Mr. Rose during the trial, told the jury, "Regarding your verdict, I see only two possibilities on the basis of the proof presented—firstly, innocent, or secondly, guilty as charged. There is no middle way."

U.S. Said to Trail In Megatons, Not Missile Numbers

WASHINGTON, March 12 (NYT).—The White House said yesterday that President Nixon was referring to "megatonnage" when he told newsman C. L. Sulzberger in an interview this week that the Soviet Union was far superior to the United States in missile strength.

In an unofficial transcript of the interview, published in Thursday's International Herald Tribune, Mr. Nixon was quoted as having told Mr. Sulzberger, the foreign-affairs columnist of The New York Times, that "the Soviets now have three times the missile strength (ICBM) of ourselves."

The parenthetical reference to intercontinental ballistic missiles was mistakenly added by Mr. Sulzberger in editing the transcript from his notes.

Ron Ziegler, the White House press secretary, said that Mr. Nixon was actually referring both to intercontinental and to submarine-based missiles and to "megatonnage, not numbers, of missiles."

order to block North Vietnamese supplies.

North Vietnamese gunners pounded Sophia on Wednesday, the sources said, but South Vietnamese casualties were reported to be light.

The troops at the base were airlifted to Fire Base Brown, 12 miles southeast of Sepone, where three U.S. helicopters were shot down yesterday, South Vietnamese sources said. There are also plans to move out of Fire Base Liz a few miles east of Sophia.

Many of the 800 troops at Liz have already moved south toward Route 914, an important artery in the Ho Chi Minh Trail, to continue destruction of North Vietnamese supply lines.

Despite the pullback from their westernmost position in Laos, Saigon troops were still holding positions at Ta Luong, about five miles southeast of Sepone.

A battalion of troops discovered the bodies of 471 North Vietnamese there yesterday as well as a large supply dump hit by B-52 air strikes.

South Vietnamese forces have suffered casualties of more than one-sixth of the 20,000 troops in the overall operation and two important positions have been overrun. Saigon may have decided to try to avoid giving the north Vietnamese a chance to launch a major counterattack that might inflict enough casualties to harm military and civilian morale.

6 Helicopters Lost

SAIGON, March 12 (UPI).—The U.S. military command reported the loss of six more American helicopters to Communist gunners in Laos and adjacent Quang Tri province in the northwestern corner of South Vietnam.

One crewman was killed, seven wounded and two missing in the downings, spokesmen said today. Three copters were shot down in Laos and two in Vietnam yesterday. The sixth was downed last Saturday.

At least 31,200 helicopter sorties have been flown by Americans in the 33-day-old operation, along with 3,100 sorties by fixed-wing aircraft and scores of B-52 bomber missions, officials reported.

South Vietnamese military spokesmen in Saigon said at least 7,386 Communists have been killed in the total campaign. They listed government losses as 711 killed, 2,664 wounded and 166 missing. These spokesmen said at least 108 Communist tanks have been destroyed along with 263 trucks, 13,519 tons of munitions and nearly one million gallons of fuel.

Guerrillas Head for Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia, March 12 (Reuters).—Hundreds of Viet Cong guerrillas on bicycles have been spotted heading north toward Phnom Penh amid speculation that the Communists may launch attacks in the capital.

The military high command said it had detected increased infiltration toward the capital from the south. The buildup could mean Viet Cong strikes in Phnom Penh when the government celebrates the first anniversary of the ousting of Prince Norodom Sihanouk on March 18, the command said.

U.S. Delegate In Vienna for SALT Parleys

VIENNA, March 12 (AP).—Ambassador Gerard Smith, head of the U.S. delegation to the American-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT), said on arriving here for the fourth round of discussions that "significant differences remain to be overcome."

But he added: "It is the view of the United States government, as recently stated by President Nixon . . . that the basis of an agreement may be emerging. Thus the fourth phase of our talks may reach a significant stage."

Mr. Smith did not elaborate on the differences between the U.S. and the Soviet delegations which open meetings here next week.

Libya Assails Oil Firms; Talks Seen Near Collapse

TRIPOLI, Libya, March 12 (AP).—Oil-rich Libya, with the deadline it set for a price accord with oil companies expiring tomorrow, assailed the Western firms today for trying to rally oil-consuming countries against Libya.

This strategy, Libya said in a radio broadcast, is "a great mistake."

"The consuming countries should not be involved in the current negotiations as a third party," Libya said.

The radio commentary came as Libya and the major Western oil companies were reported by Baghdad radio heading toward "total collapse" in their talks.

Baghdad radio also reported the departure of Iraq's Oil Minister Sadoun Hummadeu for Tripoli for a strategy conference among the four oil-exporting countries which have still to come to terms with oil firms.

Other oil countries of the Middle East came to an agreement with the companies in a package deal estimated to boost their oil revenues by about $400 million a year.

The companies are said to be offering the same deal for Libya. If accepted, it would also apply to Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Algeria.

But Libya, negotiating first and with the backing of the other three countries, is pressing for a settlement that oil experts estimate would cost the companies $800 million a year.

Chief among Libya's demands is a compulsory reinvestment of about 25 cents a barrel—which company officials resist strongly.

Nixon Invites 9 Women Reporters And 20 Others Protest Exclusion

WASHINGTON, March 12 (AP).—President Nixon caused a stir of protest last night among women reporters who were left out of a 75-minute talk he held in his oval office with nine newspaper women.

The other women assembled in the White House press room, complaining bitterly at their exclusion and sang the civil rights song "We Shall Overcome."

The story, dealing with Mrs. Nixon's forthcoming 59th birthday, was given out with the stipulation that it not be used until 6 p.m. EST tomorrow.

A score or more reporters complained to Press Secretary Ron Ziegler when they learned that no transcript would be issued to those who were not admitted to the President's office.

Some of the reporters told Mr. Ziegler that many of them had requests on file to interview the President.

Mr. Ziegler told them a tape-recording would be played so that everyone could hear the President's remarks. He said Mr. Nixon was trying different ways of communicating, and this was one of them.

Earlier this week Mr. Nixon gave an exclusive interview to C.L. Sulzberger of The New York Times and last Sunday he made a telephone call providing another reporter with an exclusive interview.

Bing Crosby Group Trying To Ransom PWs From Hanoi

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif., March 12 (AP).—A group of wealthy Americans including singer Bing Crosby is trying to arrange for ransom or internship in a neutral country of American prisoners in North Vietnam.

Mr. Crosby's older brother, Larry, 76, who often acts as a spokesman for Bing, 67, said yesterday that an emissary of the group is trying to arrange private meetings with North Vietnamese officials.

An emissary already has met once this month with North Vietnamese embassy officials in Vientiane, Laos, Larry Crosby said.

"He found out there they would listen to a deal, but they wanted me to appoint several prominent businessmen as a negotiating committee," said Larry.

Would Pay Ransom

He said the group, known as "The Prisoners of War Rescue Mission," is willing to ransom the U.S. prisoners with cash, reparations, or both, even if it only means the prisoners would be interned in a neutral country agreeable to both Hanoi and Washington. Mr. Crosby said the State Department has given its blessing to the private talks.

The emissary is still in Vientiane awaiting word from the North Vietnamese, Mr. Crosby said, "and if they come through with a reasonable offer he would then go to the American public for additional funds, if needed."

He said the committee, which already has five leaders of the American business community, is "going after freeing the prisoners first."

"If we can't get that—and it's doubtful we can—at least we want to see if we can get them into a neutral country such as Singapore. We'll pay the government of the neutral country for their room and board." He termed the internment idea new and said it "is our biggest hope."

North Vietnam has publicly admitted holding 339 Americans, although the Pentagon says many more than that are being held captive.

Mr. Crosby said the businessmen's emissary is John G. Fairfax, whom he described as a retired San Francisco building contractor, who for the past three years has been campaigning to free the U.S. prisoners.

Mr. Crosby declined to name the five businessmen, but described them as "pretty well-known."

U.S. Disapproves Plan

WASHINGTON, March 12 (Reuters).—The State Department today voiced its disapproval of a plan by Bing Crosby to try to negotiate ransom for the release of American prisoners of war in North Vietnam.

Spokesman Robert McCloskey said the release of war captives should be settled on the basis of the Geneva conventions and not through a ransom. But he said the United States would not try to block the rescue effort.

An Arms-Free Sinai Asked By Mrs. Meir

Mr. McCloskey. "We have not taken offense."

He said Mr. Sisco's call to Ambassador Rabin about the embassy document was "amiable," but refused further description.

The paper hinted that the United States and other governments may be trying to pressure Israel to promise a withdrawal from occupied Arab lands seized in the six-day 1967 war.

Mr. McCloskey recalled today that yesterday the department declared: "The U.S. government is not exerting pressure on the Israeli government, and the Israeli government is aware of that."

Israeli officials also said publicly there was no such pressure on Jerusalem.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers also turned aside suggestions of a falling out with Israel over U.S. pressure to negotiate.

"Some differences of views exist," he said, "but we are dealing with these differences in a very friendly way."

Replying to a question, the secretary said the administration was not considering providing U.S. guarantees of Israel's border in case of a settlement.

The United States, he said, was "prepared to play a responsible and appropriate role in peacekeeping." He again suggested a U.S. peace-keeping force which could not be ousted from the area arbitrarily.

So far as possible resumption of diplomatic relations with Cairo, which has been hinted at in some news reports, Mr. Rogers said: "At the moment, it is not in the cards." He hoped it might come about in time, however, the secretary said.

W. Berlin Church Robbed of Icons

BERLIN, March 12 (AP).—West Berlin's only remaining Russian Orthodox church was robbed of 40 valuable icons last night, police said today.

A spokesman put the value of the stolen objects at one million marks ($277,000). He said the most valuable object was an oil painting on wood of the Madonna holding the child Jesus, with a silver background and golden halos. It was a gift of the last Russian czar to the Russian Orthodox community in Berlin.

Extremist Arms Seized in Paris

PARIS, March 12 (AP).—Police squads searching university campuses and party offices seized a ton of weapons—steel bars, clubs and staves—today in raids on the headquarters of warring left and right extremist groups.

About 250 officers were involved in the raids on the "armories" of leftist groups at the Censier campus of the Sorbonne, in Paris, and on the party offices of Ordre Nouveau, an extreme rightist party.

On Tuesday the groups fought the most violent street battles seen in Paris since the May, 1968, student uprising.

Ten arrests were made at the Ordre Nouveau headquarters and a hunting rifle was seized there.

enate Approves $1.5 Billion or Appalachia Aid Program

ASHINGTON, March 12).—The Senate has approved 5-billion, four-year extension he Appalachia program in the of President Nixon's proposal to drop the depressed area project and substitute nationwide revenue sharing.

The 13-state Appalachian aid program was sent to the House.

Before the 77-to-3 passage yesterday, the Senate adopted by voice vote an amendment sponsored by Sen. Norris Cotton, R., N.H., authorizing $137 million to finance a one-year extension of five other existing regional commissions and two being established.

Republican leaders denied that Senate approval of the regional aid plan could be construed as rejection of nationwide revenue sharing. But passage did put a knot in the President's hopes of phasing out the Appalachian Regional Commission in one year and replacing it with a program of federal revenue sharing for rural community development.

Extension of Act

The bill provides for a four-year, $571-million extension of the 1965 Appalachian Regional Development Act. The money is earmarked for education, housing, health and restoration of areas scarred by mining.

In addition, the bill would provide $925 million for five years starting in fiscal 1973 to build highways in the Appalachian states and $40 million for general improvements and airport safety equipment.

Regional commissions extended for one year by the amendment would be the Ozarks, Great Lakes, New England, coastal states and four corners. The latter is comprised of Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah.

The Nixon administration, on the other hand, has proposed a one-year, $283 million extension of the Appalachian Regional commissmsion, which benefits states from New York to Mississippi. Under the proposal, the commission would then be supplanted by a $1.1 billion nationwide program of revenue sharing keyed to rural development.

No Setback Seen

Sen. Howard Baker, R., Tenn., a Senate sponsor of the administration's revenue sharing programs, said that Senate passage was not a setback for the administration. "The Appalachian Regional Commission is really a form of revenue sharing and has been all along."

The amendment to include the other regional commissions was added on the Senate floor after Sen. Cotton said that he had "been around the Senate too many years to defer the legitimate claims of New Englanders."

ongress Asked To Rehabilitate Robert E. Lee

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI).—Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Va., has introduced a resolution to restore, posthumously, Gen. Robert E. Lee's citizenship. Sen. Byrd said that the national archives recently revealed that Lee took an oath of allegiance to the Union in 1865 at the end of the Civil War. He died five years later.

The 14th Amendment to the Constitution requires a two-thirds vote of Congress to restore citizenship to any army officer who rebels against the United States. "I feel that Congress should act now to restore the full rights of citizenship to one of the greatest Americans of all time," Sen. Byrd said.

enate Passes ocial Security enefit Increase

WASHINGTON, March 13 (UPI).—The Senate voted unanimously today to increase social security benefits for 26 million Americans by 10 percent retroactive to last Jan. 1.

The Senate voted to tack the billion increase in benefits to House-passed bill raising by $35 billion the ceiling on the national debt.

The entire bill now goes back to the House, where a conference committee will shape a compromise version carrying both the increase in the debt limit and the social security provision.

Anti-Drug Curb Asked in U.S. Aid

WASHINGTON, March 12 (Reuters).—A bill was introduced in the Senate yesterday that would automatically end American aid to governments that refuse to help control the flow of heroin to the United States.

Sen. Frank Church, D., Idaho, said in a Senate speech that the legislation, an amendment to this year's foreign aid bill, was aimed principally at Turkey and other Middle East and Far Eastern countries, where most of the world's opium supply originates.

Sen. Church's bill would provide for an automatic revocation of foreign aid 90 days after a finding by the comptroller general of the United States that the country involved was not taking sufficient steps to control the drug traffic.

Scissors Cut Off NATO's Telex

MILAN, Italy, March 12 (UPI).—Someone with a pair of scissors went snip, snip Feb. 11 and cut the leased Telex lines connecting North Atlantic Treaty Organization command centers, telephone-company sources said today.

The news leaked out only after a telephone workers' union made an official protest against the phone company's interrogating persons who work in the office where privately leased telephone lines are handled. The union said police were already investigating the matter.

The sources said a number of leased lines, including some serving NATO, failed Feb. 11. Other lines were substituted for them. Then repairmen found the out-of-order lines had been cut with scissors.

Computerized Laser Beam Cuts Garments for U.S. Firm

By Isadore Barmash

NEW YORK, March 12 (NYT). The garment industry, still devoted to some handwork functions, has leapfrogged to the laser beam.

A laser garment cutter developed by the Hughes Aircraft Corporation, Culver City, Calif., was demonstrated this week in a clothing plant in Fredericksburg, Va., by Genesco Inc., the country's largest producer and retailer of apparel.

After an investment of more than $1 million, Genesco executives hailed the use of the laser cutter as "the first major advance in apparel manufacturing since the invention of the sewing machine."

Used as part of a new, computerized fabric cutter, the laser beam cuts garments singly at an intense speed and can be programmed to cut fabrics in mixed batches.

Severs the Cloth

The laser severs the cloth by concentrating intense light waves. Similar devices have been used in surgical operations and in metallurgical applications.

This method eliminates the present system in which a mechanical power cutter is moved over a thick stack of layers of cloth to cut garments in substantial batches. The laser is an acronym for "light amplification by stimulated emission of radiation."

While it appears economical to cut garments in large batches, said Franklin M. Jarman, Genesco's chairman, this often "handcuffs the manufacturer because he must accumulate substantial numbers of orders for every number in his line in order to justify the expense of cutting or sewing, or else he must carry a large inventory on speculation.

"The laser machines can be programmed to fill an order for one garment economically," he added, or as much as it costs large batches to be cut mechanically.

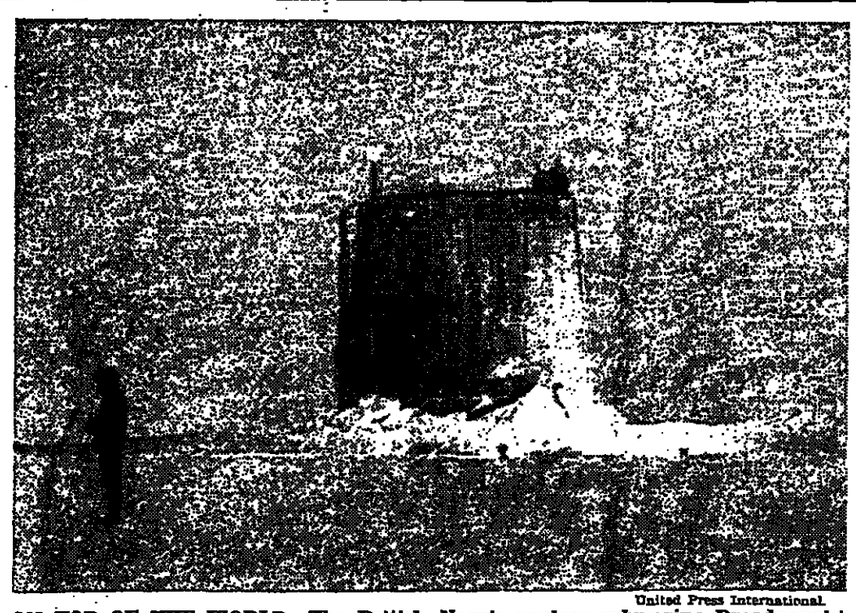

The device also cuts to a single-thread tolerance, cutting down on wastes, because it burns rather than cuts, sealing the fabric's edges.

In demonstrating the laser beam cutter in its L. Grief & Bros. plant, Genesco used a device consisting of a 50-foot-long platform, 10 feet wide, with the laser contained in the center and its beam guided by computer.

Depending upon the installation, the laser beam cutter is priced from $400,000 to $500,000, is "absolutely safe and creates no pollution," according to John H. Richardson, Hughes's senior vice-president.

As Cole Testimony Continues

Ribicoff Says Rivers Tried To Stop Senate PX Probe

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI).—Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D., Conn., said today the late L. Mendel Rivers of South Carolina tried to stop the Senate investigation into corruption in military service clubs and post exchanges involving former Brig. Gen. Earl F. Cole.

Sen. Ribicoff's statement came during testimony to the Senate investigating subcommittee when Mr. Cole said he once called Rep. Rivers to ask him to arrange a telephone conversation with Sen. Ribicoff about the investigation. When Cole said Sen. Ribicoff's staff did not comply, the senator said sharply:

"Mendel Rivers did intervene with the acting chairman of this committee on your behalf to try to stop this investigation. And Mendel Rivers did not succeed."

Sen. Ribicoff later told reporters that Mr. Rivers called him twice in the fall of 1969 to intercede on behalf of Cole.

"He said what a good Guy Cole was and that he saw nothing wrong that Cole had done . . . I felt he and Cole were good friends," Sen. Ribicoff said. He said he was "rather surprised" when Mr. Rivers called the first time, and said he told him the subcommittee would go ahead with the investigation.

"He indicated Cole was an old friend of his, that he had known him for many years," Sen. Ribicoff said. "He said as far as he was concerned he would vouch for him."

Cole was in Germany at the time he called Mr. Rivers. He was called to testify today concerning a list of 43 separate charges of alleged corruption on his part connected with service clubs and PXs in Germany and Southeast Asia.

More than two dozen civilian and military witnesses have testified that Mr. Cole was involved in corrupt practices at the clubs.

Earlier Witnesses Cited

After reading a list of 26 men who have testified or attested to Mr. Cole's actions, Sen. Ribicoff demanded: "Do you contend all 26 of these men lied?"

"I do not, sir," Mr. Cole said. "They stated what they recollected."

"Are you saying all 26 were in conspiracy to destroy you?" demanded Sen. Ribicoff.

"I don't think so," Mr. Cole responded.

"I am puzzled how each one of these 26 men could involve you and all of them be wrong," Sen. Ribicoff said. "This committee is willing to give you whatever opportunity you want to clear up any statement made against you."

Sen. Ribicoff questioned Mr. Cole about a silver cigarette box which he said Mr. Cole arranged to be presented to Gen. William C Westmoreland as a farewell present when he left Vietnam as military commander.

Sen. Ribicoff said the signature of businessman William J. Crum, whose name has been heavily involved in the corruption charges, also was engraved on the cigarette box.

Mr. Cole said he purchased the cigarette box in Hong Kong for about $40 collected from Gen. Westmoreland's staff. But he said Mr. Crum "did not give one cent" toward the gift and contended he did not know how Mr. Crum's name came to be engraved on it. Gen. Westmoreland later returned the gift.

Mr. Cole insisted repeatedly that he did not meet Mr. Crum until late 1966 and never knew him well. Mr. Crum has been described by many witnesses as the chief purveyor of bribes and kickbacks to PX and club personnel in Vietnam.

In another development, a prominent investigator who was to have presented key financial testimony collapsed yesterday and was rushed to a Washington hospital.

Carmine Bellino, 65, an accountant and former FBI agent, was to have given testimony as the Senate investigations subcommittee resumed its interrogation of Mr. Cole.

Fires Follow Puerto Rican Bloody Riots

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, March 12 (UPI).—Fires were started at homes of three Puerto Rican independence supporters today following yesterday's campus battle between rival student factions in which three persons were killed and 62 injured.

Firemen said there was no doubt the early morning fires were intentional. They said each of the houses burned flew a pro-independence flag. Damage was estimated at more than $30,000.

The government closed down the University of Puerto Rico until further notice and put a heavy police guard on the campus.

The campus battle yesterday between pro-American students and those favoring Puerto Rican independence resulted in the death of police riot squad Maj. Juan B. Mercado, police Sgt. Miguel Rosario Rondon and a reserve officers' training corps cadet, Jacintho Gutierrez Ortiz.

Fifty students were arrested on charges of assault with intent to kill, malicious damage and illegal possession of explosives.

Rioting is almost commonplace at the campus, but the sniper fire was new, and Puerto Ricans were shocked at the violence. Gov. Luis A. Ferre said in a television broadcast he would not let a handful of militants impose their will on the 26,000 students at the university.

3 Charged in Kidnap Plot Have a Talk With Kissinger

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI).—Three peace activists named as co-conspirators in an alleged plot to kidnap Henry A. Kissinger, the top presidential adviser for national security, met him secretly a week ago in the White House.

They discussed the Indochina war, general U.S. foreign policy, domestic problems and "individual responsibility" for them, one of the activists said today.

The 75-minute meeting was arranged by a mutual acquaintance, Brian McDonnell, who fasted for 30 days to protest the U.S. military operations in Cambodia last spring.

William Davidon, a professor of physics at Haverford College, said in an interview that he and the two other visitors—Tom Davidson and Sister Beverly Bell—had an amicable conversation with Mr. Kissinger but summed up the session as "bittersweet."

"He was a good listener," said Mr. Davidon. "He didn't nit-pick arguments and didn't try to divert the discussion to minor things.... He stayed with what we were talking about."

Mr. Davidon, Mr. Davidson, who is the 25-year-old son of an Episcopal bishop, and Sister Beverly Bell, 44, of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, agreed not to discuss the Berrigan case during the meeting or to make their talk public until a week had passed.

"I think Kissinger feels that we have a serious crisis generally in this country, but he didn't offer any solutions," Mr. Davidon said. "We agreed that the Vietnam war is only one of many causes of the domestic crisis."

The three were named as co-conspirators Jan. 12 by a federal grand jury in Harrisburg, Pa., that indicted six pacifists led by the Rev. Philip Berrigan on charges that they conspired to kidnap Mr. Kissinger last month after blowing up federal buildings in Washington.

Patience Wearing Thin

Burger Says Crime Jams Courts, Delays Civil Cases

By Ronald J. Ostrow

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., March 12.—Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said today that the patience of "quiet" Americans is wearing thin with a judicial system that allows flagrant lawbreakers to monopolize the courts.

Civil justice "is becoming the stepchild of the law," with non-criminal cases requiring more than four years to be disposed of, Chief Justice Burger told a national conference on judicial reform.

"We are rapidly approaching the point where these quiet and patient Americans will totally lose patience with the cumbersome system," he said.

Citizens who can't afford expensive court costs and don't qualify for government-backed legal assistance "are forced to stand by in frustration and often in want while they watch the passage of time eat up the value of their case," the chief justice said.

At the same time, he added, they "witness flagrant defiance of law by a growing number of lawbreakers who jeopardize cities and towns and life and property of law-abiding people and monopolize the courts in the process."

An example of what Chief Justice Burger had in mind would be a damage suit brought by an injured party desperately in need of funds who was forced to wait years for his suit to be tried because the courts were taken up with all manner of criminal cases.

Chief Justice Burger was especially critical of the operation of the jury system. He said selecting a jury has "become in itself a major piece of litigation consuming days or weeks."

Jurors still are herded into a common room, often twice as many as actually needed, he said. "This is often complicated by the unregulated arbitrariness of a few judges who demand more jurors than possibly could be used by one judge in one day."

Delayed Settlements

He called on trial judges to penalize plaintiffs and defendants who let their disputes drag on through the process of jury selection and then reach a settlement that could have been made earlier.

In order to develop information needed for judicial reform, Chief Justice Burger proposed creating a national center for state courts, a proposal endorsed yesterday by President Nixon.

The chief justice asked his fellow jurists to consider whether some cases even belong in the courts. As an example of matters that might be settled by other means, he cited child adoption, personal-injury claims, land-title registrations, receiverships of insolvent debtors "and possibly even such things as divorce and child-custody matters."

6th Convict Stabbed At San Quentin Dies

SAN QUENTIN, Calif., March 12 (UPI).—An inmate was stabbed to death yesterday in San Quentin Prison, where most convicts have been kept locked up during a search for weapons. It was the sixth stabbing since Sunday.

A prison spokesman said the latest victim, William P. Hanson, 28, was among 18 inmates outside their cells on a tier in the east block when he was killed.

Warden Louis Nelson ordered a general lockup yesterday after the fifth inmate was stabbed. During the subsequent shakedown, more than 40 knives were found.

French Airlines May Resume Some Service

PARIS, March 12 (Reuters).—France's three major airlines, grounded for 22 days, said tonight there was a possibility of resuming limited services shortly.

The heads of Air France, Air Inter and UTA were speaking at a press conference after last night's massive rejection by pilots of the management's latest contract offer.

Air France president Georges Galichon said in the presence of the heads of the other two airlines: "Flights will resume soon because the conflict has lasted too long and everybody realizes that this cannot go on indefinitely."

"Despite last night's vote, I think a formula can be found to resume flights," he said.

Sailor-Skier Dies

ANDORRA, March 12 (AP).—An American sailor on leave from the aircraft carrier Roosevelt in Barcelona died here today after spending a night on a ski slope in sub-zero weather. He was identified as Stanley Brandis, born in Johnson, Wash., in 1948.

Canada Starts Slaughter of 245,000 Seals

GRINDSTONE, Quebec, March 12 (UPI).—Hundreds of hunters armed with 30-inch clubs today began Canada's most controversial annual harvest—the slaughter of 245,000 baby seals on the ice floes off the east coast.

With an estimated 25 Canadian and Norwegian sealing vessels taking part, the opening of the hunt was delayed three hours by bad weather from the traditional starting time of 6 a.m. The hunt ends April 24 if the quota has been filled.

Protests from animal lovers in recent years have caused the government to cut the quota from 300,000 in 1970 to 245,000 this year.

At the headquarters for the hunt here, in the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, government officials are providing "close surveillance" of this year's slaughter.

Can Government Investigate Anyone?

We thought we had heard about the ultimate in official snooping when Attorney General Mitchell proclaimed that the executive branch has an unlimited right to eavesdrop on anyone it considers a threat to national security. But now Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist has outdone him. Appearing before the Ervin subcommittee the other day, Mr. Rehnquist said the executive branch has and must continue to have the right to collect and store data on the affairs of any citizen so long as those affairs are relevant to a subject in which the federal government has a legitimate interest.

Mr. Rehnquist, of course, didn't quite put his position so starkly. He talked first of the executive branch's right to investigate, resting that right on the constitutional responsibility of the President to enforce the law and on the promise to the states in the Constitution that the federal government will assure that they continue to have a republican form of government and will help them put down domestic violence if need be. Then he talked about the federal government's role in preventing as well as prosecuting violations of the law. And he concluded by arguing that this vital investigative function must remain unimpaired, although it could be confined to matters in which the government has a legitimate interest. He also conceded that some restrictions might properly be placed on the way the government handles and makes public what its files contain.

When you examine this position, the question that leaps to mind is what—if any—subjects the government may be said not to have a legitimate interest in. It has a legitimate interest in every penny of your income and, maybe, of your spending; the income tax law touches directly on income and tax-evasion cases are sometimes based on showing that the taxpayer spent more than he reported receiving. The government contends it has a legitimate interest in the political views of citizens; the loyalty-security program is deeply concerned about those views and so, apparently, are those government officials who worry about protecting the states against domestic violence. That takes care of the fiscal and political affairs of every citizen. Now for the family and social affairs. Some of these matters are considered relevant in security investigations; others are considered relevant to such things as the sentencing of persons convicted of crime or the granting of welfare and Social Security benefits.

When you add up these interests and apply to them Mr. Rehnquist's argument, it appears that the government has a right to investigate, and collect and store data on, just about everything you do except, perhaps, your religious affairs. As Sen. Mathias points out, such an approach to the investigatory function of government raises fantastic possibilities. That is particularly true since Mr. Rehnquist was not merely talking about information the government acquires after it suspects a person of wrongdoing. He was also talking about information collected by the government in its effort to prevent violations of law. How many people have led such perfect lives that they would be willing to have them immortalized inside a government computer?

There is no doubt that the tools of modern technology can be a great aid to the government in its fight against crime. Computers and data-storage banks may be able to produce many of the linkages—particularly in the area of organized crime—that old-fashioned methods of intelligence gathering cannot. But it simply cannot be that the government has a right to rummage around in the affairs of any citizen as it chooses, whether or not it has cause to suspect him of committing crime. That, it is worth remembering, was the nightmare in the telescreen of which George Orwell wrote in "1984":

> "There was of course no way of knowing whether you were being watched at any given moment. How often, or on what system, the thought police plugged in on any individual wire was guesswork. It was even conceivable that they watched everybody all the time... You had to live—did live, from habit that became instinct—on the assumption that every sound you made was overheard, and except in darkness, every moment scrutinized."

The alleged power of government to collect and store data on anyone's affairs, anytime it wants to, is not that far from the telescreen.

Whitney M. Young jr.

Whitney Young's sudden and untimely death—he was only 49 years old and at the summit of his usefulness—takes from the contemporary scene another of those Negro leaders who worked at once for Negro rights and for inter-racial understanding, knowing them to be inseparable. Like the late Martin Luther King jr., he opposed violence yet sought with the most ardent militancy to achieve for black Americans full equality of economic opportunity. As executive director of the National Urban League during the past decade, he worked tirelessly at the task of opening fields of employment previously closed to blacks. His tactic was to go straight to the top echelons of authority in commerce and industry and demand a fair chance for black workers.

Jobs, Whitney Young believed, afforded the master key that would, in time, open every other barrier to full racial equality. In trade after trade, he pried open doors which had been relentlessly closed and locked. Behind his quiet and cultivated demeanor, there was an extraordinary quality of force. Behind his personal charm, there lay the genuine toughness of conviction and dedication. He was a pragmatist, preferring accomplishment to rhetoric and effective influence to the assertion of power. His death diminishes all of us, for he appealed to the best in our national character—the capacity for reform and yearning for justice.

International Opinion

'Society of Violence'

It is not only police and the National Guard but also the Regular Army of the U.S.A. that is being trained for a war against its own people. The state apparatus is being geared to seek out and persecute the "nonconformists." The American society of violence is also becoming a society of police surveillance which covers all and everyone. It would be premature, of course, to say that fascist trends have already got the upper hand in the United States. There are forces in the country capable of barring the road to extreme reaction. And although these forces are still much too scattered and lack organization, they do exist and are becoming increasingly active.

—From Pravda (Moscow).

Chou's Visit to Hanoi

By going to Hanoi, Chou En-lai wanted to remind the U.S. that it would not extricate itself cheaply from Indochina if it continued to apply military rationales. It is quite obvious that China will never permit the Hanoi regime to be imperiled, and Mr. Nixon is aware of this. This is why he puts forth the alibi of disengagement: He implies that it is not the Americans who invade Indochina, but the Indochinese who settle accounts among themselves. Let us not underestimate Mr. Nixon; he only suggests that North Vietnam might be invaded. His real purpose consists of compelling the North Vietnamese to negotiate under such circumstances that they would have to renounce unifying Vietnam under a Communist regime. The Chinese, on the other hand, are probably less disposed to send volunteers to Indochina than to counter Mr. Nixon's tactic. What remains of this verbal escalation is the continuation of the war: declarations of intentions prolong the massacre.

—From Combat (Paris).

'Last War' for the U.S.?

When the President of the United States says that the Vietnam war may be the last his country will face, the phrase is so striking that it deserves examination. If the President believes an era of peace is about to dawn it is encouraging news, though it would be nice to know more about the crystal ball into which he is looking. Or does it mean that the President foresees a new age of American isolationism? This hardly seems likely. Perhaps he means that the Vietnam war will be the last war because we are all soon likely to be covered in radioactive dust in inevitable and instantaneous megadeath. The most plausible explanation is that Mr. Nixon was thinking of his forthcoming election, and making the soothing noises required of an incumbent President. Peace is still a long way off. We shall be searching for it long after Mr. Nixon is gone.

CAIRO—The Times correspondent at Cairo telegraphs that he has reason to believe Egyptian troops are to advance at once up the Nile to occupy Dangola. It has been felt for some time that in view of the restlessness of the dervishes it was desirable that a demonstration in force should be made across the frontier at Wady-Haifa, and representations in this sense have been made to Her Majesty's Government. The defeat of the Italians at Adowa has precipitated matters.

LONDON—There is a growing feeling in Ireland that the Republicans will attempt to make the Northern Irish Parliament as difficult as possible. Special efforts are being made by Sinn Fein to stir up and mobilize in six Ulster counties an active opposition. Sympathizers are numerous, particularly in Derry, Tyrone and Fermanagh. Competent observers are fully expecting Sinn Fein raids over the political border of Ulster when the new parliament is established.

Pipe Dreams in New York

By James Reston

NEW YORK.—John Lindsay, it says here in the New York papers, is thinking of turning Democrat and running for President of the United States, and it could be true. There is nothing a man won't consider these days to get out of being mayor of New York.

The bet here, however, is that Hizzoner won't do it. He is trapped in his present job. He is too independent for the Republicans and the Democrats are too independent for him. Besides, his best chance of being President—and it's not very good—probably lies with the Republican party—in 1972 if President Nixon pulls out of the race, which is not so impossible as it sounds. Or, failing that, in 1976, if Nixon runs in 1972 and is beaten.

John Lindsay has about as much chance of being offered the Democratic nomination for the presidency as Billy Graham has of being the next Pope in Rome. He could switch parties and fight it out with Muskie, McGovern, Jackson and Bayh in the primaries, and later on with Humphrey in the convention, but nobody's going to give him the nomination, and it's hard to see how he could leave New York to campaign for it without resigning.

Full-Job Time

Being mayor of New York is not the same thing as being governor of Alabama. George Wallace could abandon his job and spend most of a year touring the country for votes, or even turn the whole thing over to his wife. But every night is a possible disaster in New York City, demanding the instant presence of the mayor, and while Mary Lindsay could undoubtedly run the store at least as well as her husband, the New York job is not organized for absentee owners.

There are undoubtedly a lot of people in this country who are not exactly exhilarated by the prospect of having to vote in 1972 for Nixon or for Muskie, McGovern, or Humphrey—in fact many people are deeply depressed by the thought of any of the traditional candidates. They long for any new face and talk vaguely about Lindsay, John Gardner, and the president of Yale, Kingman Brewster.

In fact, the very same thought may very well trouble Messrs Lindsay, Gardner, and Brewster occasionally in the night, but there is a vast difference between these fugitive dreams and political reality.

Help From Daley?

Imagine, if you can, Mayor Lindsay confiding in Mayor Daley of Chicago that he was thinking about becoming a Democrat and asking for Daley's support as the Democratic nominee for the presidency; or putting the same proposition to any of the other powerful elders of the Democratic party.

The Democratic party may be a wreck, but the old pros still own the wreckage, and the rising Democratic candidates, much as they would like to see Lindsay abandon the Republicans, are not likely to stand aside and let a newcomer ruin their own ambitions.

Once a man gets the presidential itch, regardless of whether he has the talents for the job, nothing in the realm of logic or common sense can bring him back to sanity. It is a force more powerful than sex or booze, and the fever is now running high among the Democrats.

George McGovern is already well down the track. Ed Muskie is reading his newspaper clippings and watching the polls and organizing quietly for a start later on. Hubert Humphrey, whatever he says, is watching for a chance to recoup his losses, and who knows, maybe even Lyndon Johnson wonders occasionally if the party might not summon him to the rescue.

It is not impossible for John Lindsay to switch and fight and win, but he would have to risk his political life to do it. It is barely possible. He would have to feel that the country was in such deep trouble, so divided by the war, so threatened by social tension and economic recession, that nothing else mattered so much as changing the political leadership of the nation.

In theory, John Lindsay undoubtedly believes this, but he has too much humor and there is too much Yale in him to feel that he personally is the answer to the country's troubles. Being mayor of New York is not the sort of experience that encourages a man to believe he can work miracles. He is clearly more confident than when he took over City Hall, but he also has a keener appreciation of the limitations of political action.

So he holds back, just as Gardner and Brewster hold back, and besides, there is always the possibility that the element of accident, which is very large in this chancy business, will change the entire picture in 1972 or anyway in '76.

He will be going around the country speaking to the politicians and the disenchanted for the rest of this year and the beginning of next, and if the President does pull out, there will be a spectacular battle for the nomination among Lindsay, Gov. Reagan of California and Gov. Rockefeller of New York.

But outside of this long-shot possibility, the chances are that he will neither switch nor fight. The best guess here is that he will simply stick around and let his staff spread the rumors of his availability, and wait in the Republican party for events to determine the outcome.

Museum Fees

Your (AP) report that most British museum curators oppose the government's plan to charge admission to museums (March 3) concludes with an understandable but false assumption that the museum fees will pay for museum expansion. In point of fact, the government has all but assured a protesting public that its entry payments will be channeled directly into the general treasury, and not earmarked in any way for the betterment of museum collections or maintenance.

Nixon and Peace

I see (IHT, March 11) that our President apparently wishes it to be put on record that he is a deeply committed pacifist, and, in recalling the ideals of his mother, a Quaker, expresses the conviction that, "It is not enough just to be for peace. The point is, what can we do." Being a Quaker mother myself, I certainly couldn't agree more, but feel there is a certain disparity of opinion between Mr. Nixon and some of the rest of us as to what to do. I am surprised to see that he refers to his mother's Quaker convictions rather than his own, as he himself assured me that he was a Quaker 15 years ago, and this was confirmed a few months ago when I phoned the White House, since I was beginning to have really serious doubts. As we say in Geneva: "Il faut savoir."

'Liberating' China's Women

Out of Bondage

By Norman Webster

PEKING.—Birth control, feminine hygiene and traditional Chinese herbal medicine are being emphasized here in a drive to improve the health of the hundreds of millions of women in China's rural areas.

Late marriage and family planning are being strongly stressed and China's pharmaceutical industry pushed to produce more birth-control materials—including pills. Sterilization operations are done in villages by mobile teams that carry their equipment on bicycles. For those who do get pregnant, midwives are being trained in new methods of delivery, eliminating unsafe procedures based on ancient beliefs. There is also an important push to educate the often illiterate peasants in basic health and hygiene—particularly for women menstruating, pregnant or giving birth.

Linked with this is a search for new knowledge on women's ailments and new ways to treat them. The Chinese are concentrating on medicines made from cheap, readily available medical herbs rather than the rarer and more expensive Western-style preparations. Much of the propaganda, investigation and treatment is being done by female "barefoot doctors" and other women trained in prevention work and able to treat common, uncomplicated medical problems.

Freed From Bondage

Recent publicity about the health drive coincides with International Women's Day, which was marked this week. China customarily observes it in the press with stories of exemplary female workers, peasants and soldiers. Under the Communists Chinese women have been freed from the semi-bondage their sex knew during most of this country's long history. They pay for their liberation with hard work.

Mao Tse-tung noted in 1956, "China's women are a vast reserve of labor power. This reserve should be tapped in the struggle to build a great socialist country."

Tapped it is, particularly for the rice, wheat and cotton fields, the pigpens and the small commune industries of the countryside. Poor levels of female health thus became an important productivity consideration. That things can stand some improvement is indicated by the survey taken over the course of a year in a county in Kiangsu Province. Of 151,000 women investigated, according to an article in the People's Daily, 20 percent were not able to participate normally in collective labor and 50 percent had some ailment.

This was a loss of some importance to the collective. Medical treatment and propaganda resources were brought to bear during this past year, and the situation is said to have improved greatly.

Stepped-up investigation into female ailments has resulted in new cures. A recent New China News Agency article, for example, told of success by medical workers from Canton's Sun Yat-sen Medical College in treating prolapse of the uterus with acupuncture and Chinese medical herbs. "Carcinoma of the cervix uteri and choriocarcinoma" have been treated with a combination of herbs and Western medicine.

In Kiangsu Province, much research has gone into developing such combined treatment methods, and even into exclusively herbal prescriptions. The Chia Nan Commune has come up with one which reduces the price for treatment of a particular women's disease from just over 2 cents per person per time to less than one-third of a cent.

One woman from the Chia Nan Commune had suffered from a female ailment for seven years with bad effects on her work and participation in political study. After a visit from a barefoot doctor and treatment with herbs and pills, she was so thoroughly cured that she has since become an elite commune member.

Childbirth is another area for new techniques. In Chinese rural areas unhygienic conditions, lack of trained help and old-fashioned methods, some based on ancient superstitions, make this more dangerous for mother and baby than it need be. More midwives are being instructed in new methods. A woman from Kwangtung Province said in the People's Daily that her training had taken a month. Since returning to her mountain village three years ago she has delivered 70 babies, including 15 difficult ones.

Barefoot doctors and midwives in Shansi Province have campaigned against an old method which required a woman giving birth to do it sitting up, then to stay in a sitting position for three days following the birth and eat only thin porridge. Rates for infant mortality and maternal complications have dropped.

There is also an extensive family-planning program in the countryside. There is propaganda against rural traditions, which favor the production of a maximum number of sons. There is encouragement of late marriage—not always successful, as a recent report on "an evil wind of early marriage" in Honan Province indicated.

There is dissemination of birth-control information and devices, although it is hard to know just how extensive this is in the countryside. One conclusion of those investigating the female health situation in rural Kiangsu was that more birth control "medicines and materials" must be made available in rural areas.

Materials and methods include all those known in the West including birth-control pills. A pamphlet on sale in Peking recently claimed a percentage success rate in the high 90s for pills. These were pills for women. There was no mention of the birth-control pills for men, in use at a commune visited near Canton last year. Apparently these are still experimental.

The Price of a Quiet Drink

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON. — "I suppose you Americans have twice our income per capita, but that is just a way of lying with statistics. This is a better country to live in, we all know that: more comfortable, less worried, a satisfactory life. The fact that we show up poorer in the figures does not really matter."

The man speaking was not smug or idle but one of the hardest-working, toughest-thinking figures at the center of the British Establishment. His views would certainly be echoed by many American visitors to contemporary Britain, who find here a humane respite from the tensions of their own country.

Alas, the formula is turning out to be not quite so simple. It seldom is.

The British are becoming increasingly aware that they face a dilemma about their way of life. If they stick to their relatively comfortable, easy-going habits, this country will slip steadily downward in the international economic standings. And as that fact becomes apparent, it is bound to produce a new kind of social unrest here.

A Few Figures

Average per-capita income in Britain is now somewhat less than half that in the United States: $1,855 in 1969, compared with the U.S. figure of $3,676. But America is really too distant for comparison, geographically and psychologically. More to the point is Britain's standing in Europe.

Ten years ago the British had the third highest gross national product per-capita in Europe, trailing only the Swedes and the Swiss. Now Britain is ninth in that league, behind Sweden, Switzerland, Denmark, France, Norway, West Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Those are not just figures in the abstract. They mean, in the real world, that British executives now get lower rewards than French, that automobile workers on the Continent are catching up to, and passing, British wage rates. Whether specifically aware of Continental comparisons or not, British workers feel their own rising expectations are not being met.

Ford's British plants have been on strike now for more than five weeks. Henry Ford 2d has been threatening to cut back his investment in Britain because of persistent labor unrest. It is not only this big strike but also endless little ones about this grievance or that; last year they cost Ford $50 million in lost production.

Internal Pressures

The sensible thing, it seems, would be for the Ford workers to open the way to higher earnings by being more productive—working harder, more steadily, with fewer disputes. But some psychologists here would argue that the squabbles and tea breaks are mechanisms to deal with the dreary pressures of the assembly line. In other words, British workers really do not want to be more efficient; they prefer a less tidy life.

If this were still an island unto itself, that would be fine. But Ford can and does make cars elsewhere. Similarly, the comfortable life worked beautifully at Rolls-Royce—with feeble management and padded payrolls—until the bitter facts of international aero-engine competition told.

The dilemma may be even more painful in the area of personal services than in manufacturing. For it is those little extra services, still so complete and courteous, that make life pleasant for the British and their visitors.

There is the smiling young man who pops into your train compartment to offer coffee and biscuits. Or the nurse who comes into your hospital room instead of just answering the patient's buzz over a loudspeaker. Or the postman who slips the mail through the slot in your front door twice a day and occasionally asks how you're keeping.

They have all been possible because some people accepted low wages, and now they do not want to. The answer is to mechanize, to eliminate unneeded workers. But then it will no longer be Britain. As Rene Cutforth of the BBC said about more efficiency in the postal service:

"The postman is only a viable economic unit if he is serving a machine, not a village. The fact that he prefers the village and the village prefers him cannot for a moment hold up the inevitable march of progress."

And so Britain faces the probable necessity of doing things to maintain contentment, that in fact will make her less contented. A German correspondent here was asked once whether he did not mind the strikes, the fatuity, telephones, the bumbling. "Oh no," he said. "If you change it too much, it will be like Germany."

overnor Calls It Federal Matter

est Indian Leaders Oppose irgin Islands Drive on Aliens

By Irwin Goodwin

INT THOMAS, Virgin Is-, March 12 (WP).—High-ing officials from two West-n governments have come to intercede with Gov. Mel-H. Evans on behalf of their trymen who are being ex-d en masse from the Virgin ds.

the last two weeks, U.S. igration officials have round-p and expelled about 1,400 ens of British Commonwealth ds. They had either entered he Virgin Islands illegally or overstayed their temporary residence visas.

Gov. Evans pointed out that the expulsions were a federal matter.

Donald Halstead, Antigua's minister of home affairs, told Gov. Evans that aliens contributed to the prosperity of the Virgin Islands and should be allowed to become legal immigrants. Mass expulsions, he said, would cause problems in the aliens' home countries. Antigua, he noted, has a 40 percent unemployment rate.

Robert Bradshaw, premier of the three-island federation of Saint Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, after meeting with Gov. Evans, told newsmen that he felt the aliens should be allowed to stay although he realized that the United States was acting within the law in expelling them.

Last week, the United Alien Association and the Alien Interest Movement, both supported by the Office of Economic Opportunity's $75,000 alien emphasis project, called on West Indian leaders to speak out against "inhumane treatment" of their people.

Of the 62,000 residents counted in last year's census, some 16,000 are so-called "bonded aliens"—workers allowed to enter the Virgin Islands if employers put up a bond for a specific job over a specific period. In 1969, Congress authorized these aliens to bring in their families.

The population of the Virgin Islands has doubled in the last ten years, with the number of illegal aliens estimated by the government at from 10,000 to 12,000.

The population growth has caused serious shortages in housing, schools, medical facilities and other services. Unemployment is nearly 3 percent.

The crime rate has also gone up in recent years.

Alien groups have charged the immigration service with racism. All the aliens expelled so far are black, they say, while whites here illegally have been allowed to stay.

"We are looking into that aspect," said immigration chief Dante Rossi. "We have informed about a dozen white aliens that they will have to leave. But the fact to remember is that 99 percent of the aliens without bonds are black West Indians."

Walter Emery, Expert on Ancient Egypt

CAIRO, March 12 (UPI).—Prof. Walter B. Emery, 67, of the University of London, one of the world's foremost Egyptologists, died last night at the Anglo-American Hospital.

Dr. Emery, who had been searching for eight years without success for the tomb of Imhotep, a court architect and physician of the third dynasty (about 2980 BC), was rushed to the hospital Sunday after suffering a stroke that paralyzed his right side and affected his speech.

He suffered another stroke Wednesday night and had lapsed into a coma.

Dr. Emery, Edwards professor of Egyptology at the University of London since 1951 and field director of the Egypt Exploration Society since 1952, collapsed Sunday at Sakkara, an archaeological site near Cairo.

God of Healing

He had devoted his last years to his search for the tomb of Imhotep, who was, apparently, a historical person whose reputation so increased through the centuries that a place eventually was found for him in the Egyptian pantheon as god of healing.

One of Dr. Emery's last important finds on the site was a piece of stone about eight inches long that had been carefully placed in a wooden box with two mummified hawks and deposited in a niche hewn into a rock wall.

Inscribed in ancient Demotic text were the words: "Imhotep, the great son of Ptah, the great god and other gods who rest here."

The stone was the first direct reference to Imhotep that Dr. Emery and his team of eight other field specialists had uncovered.

Dr. Emery and his team began their work in 1963. In 1968, Dr. Emery said that he might have found the gateway to the tomb, a 37-yard-long tunnel lined with niches crammed with mummified baboons, ancient Egypt's symbol of wisdom and knowledge.

Confident of Success

While Dr. Emery was confident that he was on the right track, other Egyptologists were not so sure. They admitted that Sakkara contained a healing center dedicated to Imhotep, but said that there was no certainty that he was buried there.

It was at Sakkara that Imhotep, who began as a lowly scribe and rose to be vizier of King Zoser, directed the construction of the Step Pyramid of Sakkara as his royal master's tomb.

Dr. Emery, a graduate of St. Francis Xavier's College, Liverpool, and the Institute of Archaeology at the University of Liverpool, served as attaché and first secretary at the British Embassy in Cairo from 1946 to 1951 after his war service.

He was made a Commander of the British Empire in 1969. He will be buried in the British cemetery in Cairo as he had specified.

Frank Clune

SYDNEY, March 12 (AP).—Frank Clune, one of the best known Australian authors, died yesterday, with his 68th book, one on travel, not quite finished.

Mr. Clune, 77, was admitted to St. Vincent's Hospital on Saturday and had an emergency operation on Monday.

Mr. Clune left school with only a basic education and, at 15, ran away from home and sailed to Europe. Later, he worked in the United States, enlisted in the U.S. Cavalry, then deserted to join the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He later became a lumberjack.

He returned to Australia in time to enlist in the army in World War I and was wounded at Gallipoli. He began writing in 1930. His 67 finished books mostly were about travel, Australia and its early history.

Cites Loss to Rights Movement

Nixon Praises Young's Leadership

By Thomas A. Johnson

WASHINGTON, March 12 (NYT).—President Nixon said yesterday that "with Whitney Young's death . . . in Nigeria, I have lost a friend, Black America has lost a gifted and commanding champion of its just cause, and this nation has lost one of the most compassionate and principled leaders it has had in all the long centuries since whites from Europe and blacks from Africa began building together toward the American dream."

[Reuters reported that Mr. Nixon also ordered the Pentagon to send a jet aircraft to Lagos to fly home Mr. Young's body.]

A Quiet Radical

"The only criteria by which I want to be measured is whether or not I have helped to improve the economic, political, health and social future for black people —not on the basis of how many white people I curse out."

This is where the urbane and articulate civil rights leader Whitney Moore Young jr. placed himself on the black revolution's scale of militancy.

A man who was often perturbed by the frequent references to himself as a "moderate," Mr. Young once stated: "There is no such thing as a moderate in the civil rights movement: everyone is a radical. The difference is whether or not one is all rhetoric or relevant."

Dead of a heart attack at 49, Mr. Young carved, in some ten years on the national scene, an impressive record as a national black leader who moved with unusual ease among corporate heads, politicians, the black poor and many of those blacks who talk about armed revolution.

As the executive director of the National Urban League since 1961, he took the 60-chapter and basically middle class-orientad social work group and converted it into one of the nation's primary non-government forces working toward the self-sufficiency of black American poor. The organization now has 98 chapters and its professional staff grew under Mr. Young from 300 to more than 1,200.

Due to a great extent to Mr. Young's own highly persuasive abilities—his usually quiet voice carried just a slight reminder of his Southern background—the National Urban League has in recent years conducted rehabilitation programs among the black poor averaging about $55 million a year.

Nixon Criticized

Last summer, Mr. Young criticized the Nixon administration as being "sort of like Jello. You really can't get ahold of it. It's what I call white magic, you know, now you see it, now you don't."

But four months later, after growing angry one day at reports that the administration was preparing to spend millions to bail out some industrial giants in financial trouble, Mr. Young called the President's Urban Affairs Council and demanded to talk to them. The result was that Mr. Young talked to Mr. Nixon and his cabinet, impressing on them as a group the continued need for money for the poor.

This has resulted, said James Linen, the chairman of the league's board, in a federal grant of $28 million to the league for rehabilitative programs and for running the organization's 30 veterans centers across the country.

Mr. Young served on seven presidential commissions and had worked closely with President Lyndon B. Johnson.

One observer, who had watched the Johnson - Young relationship develop over the years, noted that they got along because they were both "consummate politicians and skillful horse traders."

In both his widely read books, "To Be Equal" and "Beyond Racism," plus a weekly syndicated column, he never varied from his central themes.

Racial separation, he contended, was the major cause of the racial dilemma. His urging that the nation begin a "domestic Marshall plan" for the poor was a definite influence on the war on poverty that followed.

Mrs. Bozell's Daughter Joins Battle Against Feminist

By Jeannette Smyth

WASHINGTON, March 12 (UPI).—The battle between militant feminist Ti-Grace Atkinson, and Patricia Buckley Bozell, managing editor of the conservative Roman Catholic monthly Triumph, continued—this time with only verbal blows.

Wednesday night, Mrs. Brent Bozell, the sister of New York's Conservative Sen. James L. Buckley, and columnist William F. Buckley jr. struck at Miss Atkinson while she was making a speech at Catholic University.

Yesterday, Miss Atkinson and Mrs. Bozell continued the battle at separate press conferences.

Miss Atkinson called hers first. She charged that there was a conspiracy" by Catholic University officials to harass her as she spoke.

'I Felt Like a Fool'

"They set that woman up," she continued, referring to Mrs. Bozell. "They knew she could get me with the pain on her face." "I felt like a fool for feeling sorry for her when I found out who she was. Mrs. Bozell is a substitute for her husband and the church."

At this point, Mrs. Bozell's daughter, Cathryn, a 19-year-old language student at Georgetown University, gasped and threw down her pen. "I won't stand for it," she muttered.

Later, Miss Bozell objected angrily.

"You questioned the virginity of our Blessed Mother!"

"I never questioned the virgin birth," Miss Atkinson said. "My whole premise was that it was a virgin birth. Who are you, anyway?"

"I'm Mrs. Bozell's daughter and I won't have you saying my mother is a prostitute for her husband and her church," Miss Bozell replied.

Miss Bozell had arrived at the press conference late, accompanied by Alan Simek, 23, another Triumph staffer. All reporters were frisked by Ruth Simpson and Ellen Povill, officers in the Daughters of Bilitis, a lesbian organization, who had come from New York as bodyguards for Miss Atkinson. They apologized as they frisked, saying, "There have been so many threats."

After the press conference, Miss Bozell said, "My mother said she hadn't hit Miss Atkinson as hard as she wanted to. I couldn't be more proud of her," she added. "I would have done the same thing."

The Triumph magazine press conference was held in the afternoon. Editor-in-chief Michael Lawrence explained that "Cathy wasn't sent to the Atkinson press conference as a reporter. We wanted to find out if any charges were to be pressed against Mrs. Bozell and, second, to see what line we should take in response."

"I have been brought up to believe," Mrs. Bozell said, "that intolerance of blasphemy is a Christian duty. The fact that I was attending the meeting as a reporter forced me to choose between my responsibilities as a member of the press and my responsibilities as a Catholic."

"The choice was spontaneous, instant and easy," she said.

The tax-free Swede

If you are temporarily resident in a European country, you can buy a brand-new Volvo free of tax and duty.
Your nearest Volvo tax-free sales specialist can tell you exactly how this scheme works. Check his address below — along with some of the reasons why Volvo is one of the toughest, safest and most comfortable cars on the road.

There's more than one Volvo
The 140 series includes saloons and station wagons — including one version with sports car power. Other Volvos: the impressive six cylinder 164 and the beautiful 1800 E Sports Coupé.

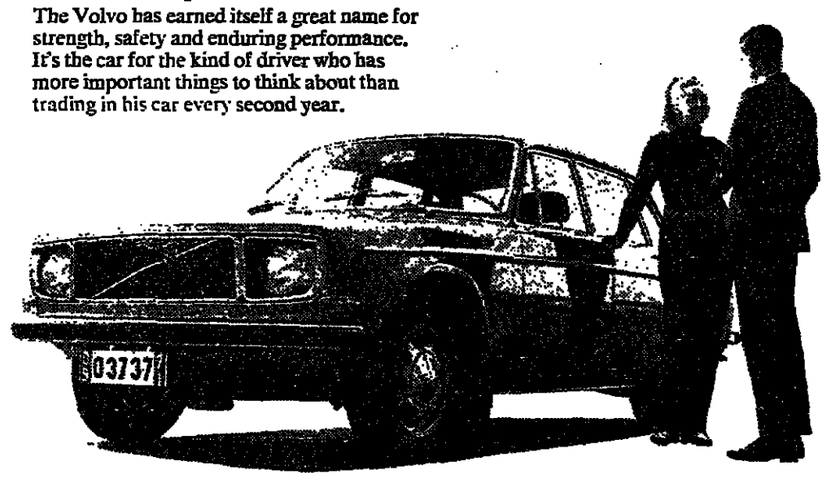

"Take-anything" engines
Volvo engines are renowned for their reliability and the way they perform in sub-zero as well as in extremely high temperatures. Precision engineering and expert balancing gives you silky power through the entire speed range.

"Fail-safe" braking system
The brakes are discs all round — and power assisted. A dual circuit safety system guarantees you 80 percent braking power even if one circuit fails completely.

Seats that adjust and adjust and adjust
Volvo seats can be adjusted for rake, height, lumbar support and pedal distance. "An orthopaedic delight", said one motoring magazine. And the rear seats take burly six footers in comfort.

An unbeatable reputation
The Volvo has earned itself a great name for strength, safety and enduring performance. It's the car for the kind of driver who has more important things to think about than trading in his car every second year.

The easy way to buy a Volvo
Under the Volvo Tourist and Diplomat Sales plan you can have a brand-new Volvo delivered to you at very short notice, free of tax and duty, insured and registered, ready to drive. When you return to your home country we'll help you to ship your Volvo home at very low freight rates. We take care of all the paper work. And, of course, your Volvo comes equipped to comply with the regulations of your own country (e.g. US specifications).

Guide to 1971 Music and Theater Festivals

PARIS, March 12.—The half a year, and more, commonly known as the festival season is about to turn loose its annual flood of activity in music, theater and the other arts—beginning early next month in such diverse atmospheres as Salzburg, Royan and London.

The following is the first installment of a partial rundown—a complete one would be impossible—of the major 1971 festivals, with a summary of the program for each, the dates as accurately as possible, and addresses (if available) where further information may be sought.

Royal Shakespeare Theatre, Stratford-upon-Avon (Begins March 30): Not really a festival, but a Shakespeare season lasting the rest of the year. First performances in the coming weeks include "The Merchant of Venice" (March 30), "Richard II" (March 22), "Twelfth Night" (April 8) and "Henri V" (April 23). (Information from the theater or the Aldwych Theatre, London.)

Camden Festival (April 2-May 1): Art, music and theater of all kinds, but mainly for rarely performed opera—this year Cilea's "Adriana Lecouvreur," Rossini's "Tandredi" and Haydn's "La Pedeltà Premiata." (Medway Court, Judd Street, London WC1H 9QX.)

Salzburg Easter Festival (April 3-12): Herbert von Karajan & Co. take Beethoven year into extra innings with a new production of "Fidelio," with Helga Dernesch and Jon Vickers, and the Ninth Symphony on the concert program with Strauss, Mozart and Stravinsky. (Osterfestspiele Salzburg, Festspielhaus, Salzburg, Austria.)

Royan Festival of Contemporary Art (April 3-9): Mainly for contemporary music, with numerous world and French premieres, concentrating this year on the East—meaning Eastern Europe and, to a lesser extent, the Far East. Includes the Olivier Messiaen Piano Competition, the Malaysian Shadow Theater, films, concerts, colloquiums running from morning to night. (Boite Postale 517, Royan, France.)

English Bach Festival (April 16-25 in Oxford; April 27-May 7 in London): Besides the festival's namesake, there are new works by Berio, Stockhausen and British composers, and a special theme of Greek drama, Byzantine and Greek folk music and premieres of works by Greek composers—marking the 150th anniversary of Greek independence. (15 South Eaton Place, London SW1.)

Premio Roma, Rome (April 21-June 2): International theater, dance, music and poetry, including the Prospect Theater's "Hamlet" with Ian McKellan, Jean-Louis Barrault and Madeleine Renaud in an evening of poetry and prose, soul music by Eddie Hawkins, ballet companies from Denmark and Djakarta—18 companies in all from 14 nations.

Lausanne International Festival (April 27-June 26): Concerts by the French National Orchestra, Orchestre de Paris, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and others; opera by the Belgrade Opera, ballet by the Niagara Frontier Ballet Company of New York State, the Philippines National Ballet, London Contemporary Dance Theatre and the Netherlands Dance Theater, and plays by the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde of Montreal and the Théâtre du Jorat of Mezières. (Théâtre Municipal de Lausanne, Switzerland.)

Schwetzingen (Begins April 29): From the 18th century to today in music amid rococo surroundings. The principal novelty this year is Aribert Reimann's new opera "Melusine," with which the Deutsche Oper of Berlin opens the 20th festival. The soprano Catherine Gayer sings the title role and will be joined by the composer as pianist in a song recital. The Prague Chamber Orchestra plays music of Mozart, Haydn and their Mannheim contemporaries, and Ferruccio Soleri does his bit as Arlecchino. (Verkehrsverein, Schwetzingen, West Germany.)

Mai Musical, Bordeaux (April 30-May 16): Opens with Puccini's "Turandot" at the Grand Théâtre, followed by chamber music from the Cologne Chamber Orchestra, the Boston Symphony's chamber ensemble, and Hephzibah Menuhin and Elaine Shaffer in a piano-flute recital. The Bordeaux Orchestra and Chorus, with Gérard Souzay and Joan Carlyle, do religious works of Fauré and Poulenc, and there are concerts by the Katowice Radio Orchestra of Poland. French drama companies perform Albee and Victor Hugo (Commissariat du Festival, 252 Rue du Faubourg St.-Honoré, Paris-8e.)

Maggio Musicale, Florence (April 30-June 30): One of the oldest of European music festivals maintains its reputation for reviving operatic rarities with Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine," Rossini's "Cenerentola," Roussel's "Padmavati," "Der Jasager" by Brecht and Weill, plus Puccini's "Turandot." Maurice Béjart and the Ballet of the 20th Century and the Ballet-Théâtre Contemporain and many other guest ensembles and soloists fill out the schedule. (Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Teatro Comunale, Florence, Italy.)

Jean-Louis Barrault who will appear at the Premio Roma, which will be held in Rome from April 21 to June 2.

Wiesbaden May Festival (April 30-June 2): Wiesbaden's own Ring cycle, with Birgit Nilsson and other stars, opera companies from Sofia and Trieste, Béjart's and Alwin Nikolais's dance troupes, concerts and theater. (Hessisches Staatstheater, Wiesbaden, West Germany.)

Pitlochry (April 30-Sept. 25): Mainly plays, but also concerts and art in the hills of Perthshire. This year the plays are "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Thark" by Ben Travers, Brighouse's "Hobson's Choice," James Bridie's "Babes in the Wood" and "Mam'zelle Nitouche" by Cotton and Stephens. (Festival Theatre, Pitlochry, Scotland.)

Festival of Flanders (May 1-June 30 and Aug. 1-Sept. 21): A mammoth program spread out over spring and summer sessions and in several Flemish cities, using many historical sites. In the spring it is mainly theater and concerts. The summer brings opera from Düsseldorf, Cologne and Munich; orchestras from Chicago, Vienna, Leningrad and Israel, several dance troupes and many musicians in recital. (Festival of Flanders, Eugeen Flageyplein 18, Brussels 5.)

Chichester (May 5-Sept. 11): Britain's National Theatre in its summer quarters. The tenth festival season includes Sheridan's "The Rivals," directed by John Clements, Anouilh's "Dear Antoine" and Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," both staged by Robin Phillips, and Robert Sherwood's "Reunion in Vienna," directed by Frith Banbury. (Chichester Festival Theatre, Oaklands Park, Chichester, Sussex.)

Brighton (May 5-16): Opens with Beethoven's Battle Symphony played by the massed bands of the Brigade of Guards, and winds up with Joan Sutherland starring in Handel's "Rodelinda." Eric Porter stars in Jean Vauthier's "The Protagonist." (Dome Box Office, Brighton, England, or Harold Holt Ltd., 122 Wigmore St., London W1.)

Prague (May 12-June 4): The "Prague Spring" has been a musical meeting ground of East and West for a quarter of a century. Besides the country's own rich resources in orchestras and opera houses, the visitors this year include ensembles from Leningrad, Sofia, Paris, the Netherlands and Belgrade. (Dum Umelcu, Alsovo Nabrezi 12, Prague 1.)

Copenhagen (May 20-June 5): Mainly for the Royal Danish Ballet, plus opera, orchestra and chamber music concerts and drama. (Royal Theater, Festival Office, Tordenskjoldsgade 3, Copenhagen K.)

Vienna (May 22-June 20): This year's Festival Weeks, with as overwhelming a program as usual, are centered on three themes: Schubert, Brahms and Composers of the 20th Century; Theater of Open Forms and a Festival of Puppet Theater. The festival is mounting its own productions of Monteverdi's "Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria," and of "Zero Zero," a new piece by Peter Turrini and Team, and 13 marionette and puppet troupes will perform at the Museum of the 20th Century and elsewhere. Karl Böhm and the Vienna Philharmonic open the Schubert cycle and Rafael Kubelik and the Bavarian Radio Orchestra close it, while all Viennese theaters and museums will, as usual, make their own contributions. (Wiener Festwochen, Rathausstrasse 9, or Oesterreichisches Verkehrsbüro, Friedrichstrasse 7, Vienna.)

Salzburg Musical Spring (May 22-31): This festival city's most relaxed event, mainly for chamber and church music. On a small scale, but as high in quality as the Easter and summer festivals, and set in the halls and gardens of Mozart's Salzburg. The ensembles include the Bartok, Koeckert and Austrian string quartets, the Hungarian Wind Quintet, and the Salzburg and Bad Tölz boys' choirs. (Makartplatz 8, Salzburg, Austria.)

Glyndebourne (May 23-Aug. 3): Opera in the Sussex countryside. This year the repertory includes Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos," Tchaikovsky's "Queen of Spades," Cavalli's "La Calisto," Nicholas Maw's "The Rising of the Moon" and Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte." (Glyndebourne Festival Opera, Lewes, Sussex, England.)

Bergen (May 26-June 9): Grieg at Troldhaugen and a varied program in Bergen, including the Brno Philharmonic, the Ballet Rambert, the Indian Ballet of Kalakshetra, the Ateneum Theater of Warsaw and the Cinohern Club of Prague. (Bergen International Festival, Sverresgate 11, Bergen, Norway.)

Bath (May 28-June 6): The London Symphony, the New Philharmonia, the Amadeus Quartet, the Schola Cantorum of Oxford, Rada Lupu, Heather Harper, Geraint Evans, plus theater, poetry, films and exhibitions, under the direction of Sir Michael Tippett. Market

The Effects of An Exhibition

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, March 12.—The complex interplay between the art market and art exhibitions, little known outside professional circles, has seldom been as aptly illustrated as in the art nouveau exhibition at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs, which opened this week and will continue through March 31.

Few of the thousands of visitors to this magnificent show dedicated to three architects, Victor Horta, Henry Van de Velde and Hector Guimard—will think of it in commercial terms; indeed, the organizers didn't. Yet the show is already affecting current sales trends and it deserves attention on a few people (Lilian Nassau of New York, Ferdinand Neess of Frankfurt and two architects Alain Blondel and Yves Plantin of Paris, among them) who were able to build up their collections without attracting much attention until recently. Without these private collections and a few others assembled within the past ten years, the exhibition wouldn't have been possible.

Now, consider how the exhibition has affected the salesroom. There have been two auctions which included art nouveau objects in Paris this week, a minor one Wednesday and a more important one today at Drouot. In London, Sotheby's held a major auction last Tuesday and Christie's will have another next Tuesday. Even the timing of these sales must be considered to be related to the opening of the exhibition.

Although the show has had a clearly discernible effect on price trends, the objects sold do not necessarily have a parallel in the exhibition. In fact, no Guimard, Horta or Van de Velde object came up for sale this week. However, art nouveau objects of the type which influenced contemporary art, as opposed to the fussier style, seemed to get most from the current show.

The fact that Tiffany Studios lamps, relatively common items, should have made very high prices at Sotheby's sale is significant. The more "modern" they were, the more money they fetched. The Tiffany Studios acorn lamp was very expensive: £550; so was another Tiffany lamp at £420. However, a Tiffany lamp with "green conical shade with geometric leading and inset with a band of turtle-back glass in tridescent purple blue and gold," as the catalogue described it, illustrated one of the frequent freaks of the art market. It was signed "Tiffany Studios, New York, No. 1484-8" and numbered 532. This very lamp sold for £640 on Nov. 11, 1969, at Sotheby's but it made only £320 this week. That this was a freak was proved by the sale of a "dragonfly lamp" which made £400, a whacking sum of money.

No matter how high these auction prices may seem, they are far below those reached by dealers: according to one story, a magnificent bookcase by Guimard, now in a private collection and to be seen in the exhibition, changed hands in the recent past for 150,000 francs and is already worth more.

Few investments in the past ten years have proved as financially rewarding as high quality art nouveau. Some of the best objects are pieces of furniture designed by such architects as Guimard and Horta or drawings in crayon and wash dashed off by the same men as preliminary sketches for furniture or household tools. Often these objects were collected for little money. The Blondel-Plantin collection, which accounts for a major proportion of the exhibition, was largely formed by acquiring debris from demolished houses.

The two young men began their collection as architects acutely aware of the debt they owed Guimard, a pioneer if there ever was one. In fact, they eventually dropped architecture to devote themselves entirely to collecting Guimard. Every time havoc was wreaked in or around Paris and there was no hope of stopping the destruction, they were on the spot, ready to buy. When the Hôtel Nozal, built for a friend at 52 Rue du Ranelagh between 1902 and 1905, was torn down in 1958, they were there. Two years ago when another important house, the Castel Henriette at Sèvres, was demolished, the two men recuperated a lot of material.

Occasionally, they would come across drawings of no interest, it seemed, to anyone but themselves. Drawings, many from the architects' collection as well as from other private and public sources, displayed with the furniture they depict, are among the finest features of the exhibition.

The architects got bargains because expertise in this field, now so popular, is, oddly enough, rare. For instance a 1900 vase, which came up for sale at the Hôtel Drouot in 1969, was unsigned and undated. But to Blondel and Plantin, who know their Castel album (a collection of plates illustrating the projected house in detail, from architectural plans to small objects) by heart, recognized it. There is only one other vase like the one they bought recorded anywhere; the architects paid so little for it that they scarcely remember the sale.

Such bargains are unlikely to be made in the future. The exhibition has brought out everything that appeals to modern aesthetics in the work of Guimard, Van de Velde and Horta. The picturesque has been weeded out in favor of the avant-garde of the period. The items are displayed in a way which underscores what makes the pioneers' work so appealing to the taste of the '70s. No one is likely to forget this at auction.

In addition, the catalogue includes a major contribution on Guimard's work by Yvonne Brunhammer, curator at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs. This too will have a direct bearing on the market because few objects, drawings or fragments of architecture by Guimard are likely to be overlooked in the future.

Around European Galleries

ROME

Notargiacomo, Tartaruga, 1A Via P. Clotilde, through March.

This is the most surprising show in Rome. You enter the gallery and suddenly feel like a silly, awkward giant as 200-odd little men confront you, hanging from the rafters, climbing up the window sills, swarming over the door frames. They lounge, lie, stand, sit and kneel on the wide arena of the gallery carpet. Blandly and calmly, they stare at you, trying to make you feel guilty.

They are made of plastecene, are just under a foot high, vary only in color of shirt or pants or in pose. ("What, no women?" an American girl exclaimed.) They are extraordinarily alive. Are they New Yorkers enjoying an "occurrence" in Central Park, Fiat factory hands regimented to look at television or company soccer games? Are they a political mass listening to a leader or concentration camp prisoners forced to submit to a lecture of the camp commander?

The scene is beguiling, but not at all cute. An Orwellian forboding, an accusation is implicit, as some extra little "everymen" crouching in solitary confinement (huge apothecary jars) confirm. This is Notargiacomo's first solo. On the announcement, he is seen leaning against a Roman portrait bust twice his own size. He teaches philosophy and what he is probably after is proportion, the size of Man measured against the values of his time. This is a return to the figurative with an added twist, not too cerebral, but just mysterious enough. One hopes Notargiacomo will fulfill his promise.

Guido Strazza, 1962-71. Collezionista, 36 Via Gregoriana, Rome, through March.

Valentino Vago, Contini, 25 Piazza Mignanelli, Rome, through March.

The better painters in Italy of the last decades are engaged in a quest which, starting with refinement of the drawn or scrawled line, almost always ends up with exploring the most subtle possibilities of canvas surface. Strazza is one of the most superb exponents of this approach. His linear abstractions done in the '60s somewhat resemble the work of the late Novelli, but are much sparser. Then come complicated experiments with plastic materials. After that, patches of canvas are mounted on board, next to other patches, meeting in a hair-fine line; then, wide tapes under canvas raise hardly perceptible bands, criss-crossing or raying out. After that incisions shed clear plastic-like water jets, or scrolls of plastic curl over uniform canvas. The color of canvas is restrained and in pastel shades bleeding out softly like the dawn light over a horizon. "Cradles of the Heart" (1965) is traversed by a wavy flow of baby blue and though it appealed to me personally, is probably a sport. "Scomposizione dal Vero" is a most brilliant understatement. Strazza now is knowing, impeccable and sometimes lyrical —an interesting example of a European search for quiet expression and perfection, independent of rougher or colder airs across the Atlantic.

That also goes for Vago, who makes small signs and touches on silver gray, lemon yellow or melon pink grounds. Some are allowed to meander like snail trails, others are suspended bright staves, composing themselves in clusters. But Vago's work is more intimate than Strazza's, more "painterly." A meditative dreamy attitude pervades it.

PARIS

Le Dessin d'Humour, Bibliothèque Nationale, 58 Rue de Richelieu, Paris, to May 20.

Under the title "Humorous Drawings From the 15th Century to the Present," the Bibliothèque Nationale has assembled a large number of drawings, engravings and reproductions more or less loosely related to this almost undefinable subject. Bosch, Bruegel, Leonardo (by proxy), Jacques Callot, Rembrandt, Hogarth, Daumier, Steinberg, Searle and a host of contemporary draftsmen familiar to the French magazine reader (Chaval, Sempé, Bosc and Siné), are to be seen side by side. One may wonder whether Rembrandt's grimacing self-portraits should really be considered humorous (I think not), and one may be equally surprised at encountering some of Goya's engravings, for humor always implies some sort of reference, no matter how remote, to a common norm, while both Goya and Rembrandt had their own incommensurable norms. But in fact it is proper that they should be there for by their very presence they raise questions that no one else could so effectively raise. On the whole it is an entertaining and most interesting panorama of European wit, satire and humor. Just for the record, ancient Greece and 19th-century Japan are also represented by a couple of items.

Regards, Galerie Messine, 1 Avenue de Messine, Paris, to April 3.

This gallery was until now chiefly devoted to "art brut"—Dubuffet, Chaissac, and others who occasionally come within its orbit. The present exhibition combines works by contemporary artists (the two already mentioned and Jorn, Baj, Lam, Ernst etc.,) with primitive art. Some first-rate items including masks from Africa, North America and the Pacific, a painted shroud from Peru and a small engraved marble slab representing a human figure found in the vicinity of Jerusalem (7th century BC).

Pop Graphics, Galerie Mathias Fels, 138 Boulevard Haussmann, Paris, to April 3.

As the title indicates this show assembles graphic works by Pop artists (Dine, Indiana, Johns, Lichtenstein, Oldenburg, Rauschenberg, Rosenquist, Warhol and Wesselmann). A representative selection.

Daubigny. Galerie Barbizon, 71 Rue des Saints-Pères, Paris, to March 31.

Charles - François Daubigny (1817-1878) was essentially a landscape painter. His works have a certain heaviness that does not exclude pleasant qualities. Some thirty of them are here on view, mostly sites of the Ile de France region.

LONDON

Lowell Nesbitt, Gimpel Fils, 50 S. Molton St., London W 1.

Lowell Nesbitt, born in Baltimore, trained in Philadelphia and London, living and working in New York, with his X-ray series, 1963-64, chooses a theme common to all humanity in his first London one-man at Gimpel Fils. Clearly, he does not just deal with the bare bones of the subject, the fragments of the human frame seen with X-ray eyes; but using these as the starting point of his composition, he builds up semi-abstracts which are at the same time witty and sometimes sinister character interpretations.

Indeed, one is greatly surprised at the vast number of variations which can be adduced from the simple skeleton—by concentrating on one small part, by doubling and trebling, by catching in an awkward or unusual movement, by echoing skeletonic shape in the abstract additions.

Michael Daley, Do Not Bend, 112 Princedale Road, London W11.

At this comparatively new gallery which, as its name implies, has a strong photographic interest, the current exhibition is of sculptures and drawings by Michael Daley.

He also works as a typographer and a designer. It is evident in the sculpture, executed in a variety of media, and based on abstractions from a cock's comb, that Daley uses the same tightness he would in his design. The drawings are a relaxed, free-wheeling and light-hearted complement to the sculpture.

His is an interesting and fertile talent; I shall be very curious to see what direction it will next take.

Richard Smith, Kasmin Gallery, 118 New Bond St., London W 1.

The drawings of Richard Smith are intensely sculptural, although simple in concept and execution. The basic principle of the series is, on a white ground, to draw what may best be termed a colored cloud, usually with a single color predominant, and then to impose upon it, to cut within it, or to mount into it in low relief, shapes, frequently geometrical, of another color or colors.

The effect, in works of a modest scale, is of an impressive monumentality. Especially effective are those works where the "cloud" is interrupted by a trio of parallel elements. Notable in this genre are an orange cloud with three long bars of green-bordered red-bronze descending well below the lower edge; as well as a blue-green cloud with three more complex elements at its lower edge, comprising a brown bordered shape of three sides of a square, with a long turquoise ribbon streaming diagonally across it, and descending well beyond both cloud and angular shape. These new Smith drawings do not easily lend themselves either to description or analysis, but their impact is considerable.

Critic's Choice, Arthur Tooth and Sons, 31 Bruton St., London W 1.

Arthur Tooth and Sons for some years in the 1950's ran an annual series of exhibitions called "Critic's Choice." They revived the series last year. This year, the critic making a personal selection of the work of living British artists is Robert Melville, art critic of the New Statesman and the Architectural Review, and author of one of the earliest and best studies of Picasso.

"The emphasis in this exhibition is on various ways in which line and color attempt to trap human presence," Melville writes in his catalogue foreword. He has chosen the work of a dozen painters and one sculptor (Jann Haworth). Predictable inclusions are Peter Blake, Allen Jones, Patrick Procktor and David Hockney. More surprising and personal are the intimist Peter Unsworth, the sinister romantic Graham Ovenden, and the fauve E. Box.

Theater in London

Scofield Is Back and Magnificent

By John Walker

LONDON, March 12.—What joy it is to have Paul Scofield back in the theater; giving a superb performance, and—added delights—acting for the first time with the National Theatre Company at the Old Vic as the shabby hero in Carl Zuckmayer's warm, humane, and witty comedy "The Captain of Kopenick."

The play was a great success on its first performance in Germany in 1931 and remained for two years until the Nazis came to power. They found nothing funny in its sharp observations of the alteration in a man's behavior when he puts on military uniform. Today, it is classic comedy, still fresh and invigorating. For its anti-hero, Wilhelm Voight, is trapped by what we would recognize now as Catch-22, the insane logic of bureaucracy: He cannot get a work-permit or a passport unless he has a steady job; and he cannot get a job until he has a work permit.

The drama, adapted by John Mortimer, is played out in a succession of swiftly changing scenes, with some delicate, evocative backdrops by Karl Von Appen and Manfred Grund. Three-quarters of the play goes by before the climax is reached in the change of Voight from a cunning, hopeless recidivist into a purposeful authoritarian figure, simply by dressing up a second-hand captain's uniform.

Some of the audience seemed to find the wait interminable. But each scene is not only individually witty and pointed, but the cumulative effect is to create a pointillist picture of a society unquestioningly obedient to a system which, to anyone outside it, even an involuntary drop-out like Voight, is clearly mad, or, at least, inhuman. Each scene is a fresh variation on the theme of the power that resides in a uniform, the automatic way that people will put trust in any symbol of authority, even when misled by the ineptitude of its actual representatives. Early on, Voight, like a homeless hermit in a lab, reflects: "It's the shell, that's all that matters." Later, a man who sells him the officer's uniform says: "While it is lying there empty, I saw people admiring it."

Heroic Actor

Mr. Scofield's performance is quite marvelous. He is, after all, a heroic actor, capable of grandeur. Yet he manages to create the shuffling, bent-backed wreck that is Voight. His voice is ingratiating, tinged with the whine of someone who knows that, whatever he says, he will be ignored. There is one marvelous moment late in the play when, as the Captain of Kopenick, having occupied the town hall, he demands that the chief of police bring him a blank passport form. There are none, he is told, he has come to the wrong place. His new persona momentarily crumbles, the uniform visibly deflates, and his voice regains its old wheedling note.

Frank Dunlop directs briskly, and brings off a couple of very funny set-pieces. The first is in prison, when the governor (Gerald James) uses the convicts to re-enact one of his military exploits. The second is in May Obermuller's bedroom as he struggles to get into a uniform that appears to have shrunk over the years, the way old clothes do. Bill Fraser, as Obermuller, gives another of his excellent comic portrayals of smug pomposity. John Moffat also scores as the Fagin-like secondhand clothes man. ("Spots? They're champagne stains. For those spots, I should charge you extra.") Indeed, the acting by the entire company is of an extremely high standard. And if all that weren't more than enough, a military band oom-pahs away between scenes.

Other new plays in London:

"Man Is Man," by Bertolt Brecht, at the Royal Court. An early play, written in 1926, that links his first expressionistic period with his later methods. Set in Kipling's India, it uses heavy-handed humor to show how a man can be taken to pieces and rebuilt as someone else. No doubt essential viewing for all Brechtians, but likely to prove a disappointment to the unconverted.

The Eighth World Theatre season will open at the Royal Shakespeare Company's Aldwych Theatre on March 24 with a three-week run of Henry de Montherlant's "La Ville Dont le Prince Est un Enfant" by Jean Meyer's Theatre Michel Company from Paris.

It will be followed by Czechoslovakia's Theater Behind the Gate company in two plays by Chekhov, "The Three Sisters" and "Ivanov." Then, Stockholm's Royal Dramatic Theater will present Ingmar Bergman's production of Strindberg's "The Dream Play." The Schiller Theater Company from West Germany will present Witold Gombrowicz's horror-comedy "Yvonne, Princess of Burgundy" and a Beckett double-bill, directed by the author, of "Krapp's Last Tape" and "Endgame."

The Genoa Stabile Theater Company will follow with Goldoni's comedy "The Venetian Twins," then, the first Turkish company to appear in Britain, from the Dormen Theater, will present a new musical by Erol Gunaydin, "A Tale of Istanbul." The season will end with the Spanish Drama Company led by Nuria Espert in Jean Genet's "The Maids."

apan Holds o Its Plan n Textiles

.S. May Open Japan eel Dumping Probe

From Wire Dispatches

TOKYO, March 12.—Governnt officials and textile industry cles here were in something an uproar today over Presint Nixon's rejection of a unieral proposal to restrain the owth of textile exports to the ited States set forth by the pan Textile Federation.

In Washington, meanwhile, Dow Jones reported that the S. Customs Bureau shortly may nounce that it has ordered a ll-scale investigation of charges at Japanese steelmakers are mping certain types of stainless el in the U.S. market.]

[It is understood that the Customs Bureau order for the investigations has been drafted and is waiting approval by Assistant easury Secretary Eugene Rosides.]

Kagayaki Miyazaki, president the Chemical Fiber Association, said he did not necessarily pect the voluntary control plan satisfy everyone, because the S. government, Congress and xtile industry often had conicting views.

He said the Japanese industry ould continue to carry out preparations for the implementation f the voluntary control scheme.

No Alternative

The United States, he said, had o alternative in the final analyis but to accept the Japanese inustry's proposal.

Japanese Foreign Minister iichi Aichi said today that his overnment would continue to upport the industry plan and ould seek no further governent-to-government talks, which n two years bore no fruit.

In a statement yesterday, Mr. Nixon said the proposal to limit extile export growth to 5 percent n the first year and 6 percent in each of two subsequent years will not result in an acceptable solution. He criticized the Japanese government for apparently ratifying the proposal.

Mr. Nixon said the proposal has precluded further meaningful government-to-government negotiations and called for quota legislation by the U.S. Congress.

Mansfield Urges

WASHINGTON, March 12 (Reuters).—Senate majority leader Mike Mansfield said today he hoped President Nixon would reconsider his rejection of the Japanese offer.

Sen. Mansfield, D., Mont., said the rejection raised the possibility of trade legislation which would be counterproductive and go beyond textiles.

Last year, a bitterly fought textile quota measure grew into a wide-ranging trade-curb proposal as it wended its way through Congress. Before it finally died, it had kicked up a storm of international protest and threats of a trade war.

As Firms Sniff Out Official Thaw

U.S. Trade With Mainland China Budding

NEW YORK, March 12 (AP-DJ).—U.S. corporations have resumed trade with mainland China, after a 20-year embargo.

The flow of U.S. products and technology into China has just started, and it is small, amounting to several million dollars a year.

So far only a few U.S. companies have traded with China through intermediaries since December, 1969, when the administration eased the near-total ban that had existed since 1949.

This group of companies includes such major manufacturers as General Motors, Monsanto, Hercules Inc, American Optical, Sperry Rand and Cummins Engine.

The U.S. government still bans sales of goods deemed "strategic" though there is an occasional argument over what is strategic.

The Commerce Department generally refuses to name companies whose transactions it has cleared. However, the department has made known the kinds of China-bound products it has licensed for export. They include bag-closing sewing machines, brake parts for locomotives, parts for copying machines and chemicals for pesticide and antibiotics as well as some overseas-made products manufactured under licensing agreements with U.S. companies. All products are processed further or assembled in Europe or Japan before shipment to China.

Monsanto has sold, through subsidiaries abroad, $750,000 of chemicals, including base materials for aspirin and for rubber compounding. Transactions not yet consummated for which Monsanto has received approval may push its sales to China over $1 million.

GM Engines Sold

GM last year sold 80 truck engines to Roberto Perlini Co. of Italy, which exported the engines to Peking in Perlini dump trucks. GM received $232,000 for the engines and $450,000 for spare parts. GM acknowledges it has since sold two $30,000 earth movers to a Chinese construction group building a highway in Zambia.

Altogether, the Commerce Department says it has issued nine licenses for the export of goods or technology to China. But State Department sources say Commerce Department officials have issued many "advisory opinions" interpreted as permission to trade with Peking. Such opinions apparently deal with sales by U.S.-owned companies abroad of goods originating outside the United States. These sales don't have to be licensed.

The Commerce Department says it has denied only one license application. An Italian company using a U.S.-owned process would have made and sold a heavy press for producing sheet steel, but the press was considered strategic.

The Defense Department reportedly has delayed approval of an application by Citroen of France to use GM or Cummins engines in trucks to be shipped to China on the grounds the trucks are strategic. However, both GM and Cummins deny any plans to sell these engines, which would be valued at several hundred thousand dollars.

GM Denial

DETROIT, March 12 (WP).—A GM spokesman today denied the company was considering any new project which would involve selling diesel engines for trucks that would be sold to Communist China.

Bank in Congo Guilty of Illicit Money Deals

KINSHASA, The Congo, March 12 (AP).—The Congo's court of appeal today ordered an internationally-owned Congolese bank, Socobanque, to pay a $4.9 million fine after finding it guilty of illegal currency transactions.

The bank's general manager, Jean-Pierre de Cuyper, was sentenced to eight years in prison and ordered to pay a $350,000 fine.

In addition, the bank was ordered to pay $163,000 and Mr. de Cuyper $11,600 in restitution to the Congo.

Socobanque, with a subscribed capital of $2.4 million is 25 percent-owned by the Congo and 45 percent by the Sté Financière pour les Pays d'Outre-Mer (SFOM) of Geneva.

SFOM, in turn, is owned by Bank of America, Banque Nationale de Paris, Banque Lambert of Brussels, and Commerzbank of West Germany, which also have direct holdings in Socobanque.

Socobanque, Mr. de Cuyper and five other businessmen were charged with having dealt in black market currency transactions that led the Congolese zaire to fall from its official parity of 100 Belgian francs to a quote of 62 Belgian francs on the Brussels free market.

It was charged that much of the money traded was the profits of companies who chose to buy hard currency in the black market at a discount rather than through the central bank where they would have to make full disclosures of their turnover.

All the defendants had pleaded not guilty to charges of breaking exchange control regulations and it was felt that the case may be appealed to the Congo's Supreme Court.

Chile Says Shortfall Possible On Copper Export Contracts

SANTIAGO, March 11 (AP-DJ).—Chile may have trouble fulfilling some of its 1971 copper export contracts, Max Nolff, director of the government copper corporation, said today.

Mr. Nolff said mechanical problems in processing ore from Chile's giant El Teniente mine soon could prevent delivery of some refined copper. He said there have been "accidents in the converters" at El Teniente, but gave no details.

He said failure of Chile's previous administration to keep up with expansion schedules caused production to fall short of 1970 goals and will make it difficult to meet 1971 goals.

In 1970, Chile produced 685,000 metric tons of copper. Mr. Nolff said the country has contracts to deliver about 720,000 metric tons in 1971. The previous government's production goals were 789,000 tons in 1970 and 1,105 million tons in 1971.

The three mines that have produced about 80 percent of Chile's copper are owned in partnership by the government and two U.S. firms, Kennecott Copper (49 percent of El Teniente) and Anaconda (49 percent of Chuquicamata and El Salvador mines).

Executives Quitting

SANTIAGO, March 12 (NYT).—Industry sources say the problem in the major mines is caused in part by the resignation or retirement of more than 300 top executives and technicians, both foreign and Chilean, since President Salvador Allende Gossens took office last November.

A reported inability to meet in full scheduled copper deliveries to some European purchasers has lifted the price of copper on the London Metals Exchange from 45.6 cents a pound in January to about 50 cents at present.

Copper makes up more than 80 percent of Chile's export income. Production is said to be running about 20 percent below contracted levels.

Mr. Allende has proposed a constitutional amendment to nationalize copper properties in which U.S. firms have investments of more than $700 million.

The Senate completed approval of the plan last month, and it is now before the Chamber of Deputies, where is will stay until at least mid-April.

Meanwhile, at the Chiquicamata, Salvador and Exotica mines, 80 U.S., Canadian and other foreign managers and engineers have exercised their option to be given new jobs by Anaconda outside Chile, starting this month.

Efforts to retain the foreign personnel have been unsuccessful. For one thing, the foreigners feel harassed because left-wing politicians and publications have publicly charged them with sabotage.

The government has also uncovered a "copper scandal" involving a Swiss-based brokerage concern that offered in a message to the Chilean state bank to purchase 960,000 tons of copper. Six persons are under arrest for questioning in the case.

Orlando Cantuarias, Minister of Mines, said that there was a conspiracy to drive down the price of copper abroad by offering nonexistent copper for sale in Europe.

Pennsy Sues For Recovery Of $4 Million

NEW YORK, March 12 (WP).—Penn Central Railroad—now being "reorganized" under the bankruptcy laws—sued in U.S. district court here yesterday for the recovery of $4 million which, the railroad claimed, had been embezzled by a European financier.

Simultaneously, a House committee staff issued a report detailing the transaction, which, the report said, "has all the elements of a film script of international financial intrigue."

According to the report, Fidel Goetz, a West German citizen with a multitude of "far-flung business ventures" headquartered in Liechtenstein, forced Washington attorney Francis Rosenbaum to impersonate a Penn Central lawyer and persuade Liechtenstein officials to transfer $4 million of a $10 million Penn Central bank account to one of Mr. Goetz's companies.

At the time, Mr. Rosenbaum was under indictment for defrauding the U.S. Navy on a multimillion contract for rocket launchers and hoped Mr. Goetz would supply an affidavit to be used in his defense. Mr. Goetz declined, according to the report, and Mr. Rosenbaum later pleaded guilty and was convicted.

The report also charges that David Bevan, chief financial officer of Penn Central, acquiesced to letting Mr. Goetz temporarily manage the $4 million in an attempt "to protect himself from embarrassing disclosures threatened by Mr. Goetz concerning Mr. Bevan's involvement" in Executive Jet Aircraft—a firm in which Penn Central had invested more than $21 million. At the time, the investment had been ruled illegal by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

IOS Offshoot Says Arctic Land Not Worth Much

GENEVA, March 11 (NYT).—Investors Overseas Services has conceded that a good share of a subsidiary's holdings in the Canadian Arctic has "little present economic value."

The comment was contained in an "interim" report from Global Natural Resources Properties Ltd., formed last year when Fund of Funds spun off its holdings in oil, gas and mineral resources and real estate.

The interim report, dated Dec. 31, did not put a value on any of the natural resource assets.

Global said it had exploration permits in the Canadian Arctic for about 10 million acres, much of which is at "water depths making development under presently available techniques impractical" and therefore of "little economic value."

Copper Stocks Strong In Mixed N.Y. Session

NEW YORK, March 12.—Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed mixed today after recovering some of their earlier losses.

Trading, which had been restrained for the most part of the session, turned active in the last hour. However, volume declined to 14.83 million shares from yesterday's 19.83 million shares.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed at 898.34, down 1.10, but the NYSE index edged up 0.09 to 54.83.

The market's drifting pattern ended when copper stocks began to rise sharply following news that Chilean producers were having difficulty filling orders. Even Anaconda and Kennecott, which have major interests in Chile, recovered earlier losses in the last hour of trading. Stocks of both companies had declined immediately after the news.

Anaconda rose 1/8 to 20 3/4 and Kennecott 1 1/8 to 36. Copper Range rose 3 7/8 to 36 1/4, Phelps Dodge 1 3/4 to 43 3/4 and Inspiration 3 1/2 to 44 1/2. A copper industry expert in Chile said that a shortage of the metal there would cause a rise in prices.

Oil stocks were depressed by news that petroleum companies negotiating a price agreement with Libya hadn't been able to meet demands and that the talks had been called off.

Among companies with interests in Libya, Occidental Petroleum, which was second most active, fell 3/8 to 18 1/8 on volume of 187,900 shares. Continental Oil fell 1/8 to 33 1/4 and Amerada Hess 3/4 to 55 1/4. But Marathon Oil rose 1/2 to 35 3/8 and Jersey Standard 1/8 to 76 3/8.

Sony was the most active issue. It closed at 21 1/8, up 3/8, on volume of 249,500 shares. A Sony spokesman here said a major reason for the activity in the issue could be the strength of the issue on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. Sony rose to 3,390 yen from 3,205 today.

Glamour issues were mixed. University Computing, which was fourth most active, closed at 25, down 5/8, on volume of 177,200 shares. The company has reported a net loss in 1970, compared with a profit a year earlier. IBM rose 6 1/4 to 354, Memorex 1/4 to 68 and Xerox 7/8 to 101. Corning Glass fell 1 3/8 to 230 5/8.

American Can rose 1/2 to 43 and Continental Can 3/8 to 44 1/4. Union sources said that a tentative agreement had been reached with American, Continental and Crown Cork and Seal. The three companies have been struck for four weeks. However, Crown Cork fell 3/4 to 21 1/8.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 0.02 to 25.88, with declining issues leading advances 480 to 428 and 228 issues unchanged. Volume fell to 4.9 million shares from 6.4 million yesterday.

Mite Corp. was the most active issue, closing at 8 1/8, up 1/2, on volume of 101,500 shares. National Semiconductor, second most active, closed at 29 1/8, down 1 7/8.

Marcor Profit Slides 10.9% Despite Increase in Revenue

NEW YORK, March 12 (NYT).—Marcor Inc., parent of Montgomery Ward and Container Corp. of America, had record sales in the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, but earnings declined almost 10.9 percent from the preceding year.

Leo H. Schoenhofen, Marcor president and chief executive, said yesterday that the decline was largely due to Montgomery Ward's 10.8 percent earnings drop for the year.

Marcor net profit in fiscal 1971 amounted to $59.64 million, or $1.50 a share, down from $66.95 million, $1.72 a share, for fiscal 1970.

Sales rose 3.3 percent to $2.08 billion from $2.72 billion, following an 8.6 percent increase in fiscal 1970.

Fourth-quarter Marcor earnings fell 10.2 percent to $25.33 million from $28.21 million in the year-earlier period. Sales rose 7.2 percent to $810.36 million from $756.16 million, bettering the 5.6 percent gain made in the fourth fiscal 1970 quarter.

Montgomery Ward's sales for the final quarter rose 8.8 percent to $672.19 million, while Container Corp.'s sales were off 0.05 percent to $125.11 million.

Montgomery Ward's operating earnings for the year slipped to $39.7 million from $43.78 million, while Container Corp. showed a 5.1 percent slip to $30.17 million from $31.79 million. Both reports are before deducting financing expenses of the parent company, the report noted. Ward's sales for the year were up 3.3 percent to $2.23 billion, while Container showed the same gain with sales of $526.6 million.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Canada Seeks to Block U.S. Bid

The Canadian government has begun negotiating to buy the controlling interest in Cygnus Corp. held by R.A. Brown jr., president of Home Oil Co. Control of Cygnus would mean control of Home Oil, and success of the government action would block any chance of Home being acquired by Ashland Oil of Kentucky. Acquisition of Mr. Brown's Cygnus holdings would represent a government investment of about $10 million (Canadian). Ashland had been negotiating to buy Mr. Brown's interest before the government said it would not allow Home, the biggest Canadian-owned oil company, to become owned by foreign interests. Trading in Home Oil and Cygnus has been suspended for 15 days by the Ontario Securities Commission.

EEC Butter Mountain Melts

The Common Market's "butter mountain" has virtually disappeared and for the present only butter exports to Britain will be subsidized, the EEC reports. Butter is expected to start building up again this spring and a surplus of 135,000 tons is expected for the year. At the present subsidy rates, this would cost EEC taxpayers about $220 million. A temporary world shortage of butter, due to a drought in New Zealand and Australia, resulted in the EEC's export subsidy of $70 per 100 kilograms (220 pounds) being suspended. The subsidy to Britain is being maintained as otherwise EEC countries would not be able to sell on the U.K. market, an EEC official said. EEC export subsidies were also suspended for butter oil and some types of fresh, canned and powdered milk.

Japanese Approve Joint Ventures

Japan's Foreign Investment Council has approved a plan for Mitsubishi Bank to set up a joint lending venture with Chase Manhattan Overseas Banking Corp. Chase will own a 10 percent stake in the joint venture, Diamond Lease Co., while two Chase affiliates will hold another 15 percent. The council also approved a plan for Tokyo Shibaura Electric Co. (Toshiba) to establish a joint-venture with general Electric of the United States for the production of silicon resin. Toshiba will have a 51 percent interest in the new company.

Japan May Cut Coal Imports

Industry sources in Tokyo report that Japan's steel industry may ask Australian and other overseas collieries to defer coking coal shipments to Japan. Steel mills in Japan have decided to continue cutting back production to bolster the falling domestic steel market and reduce increased surplus steel products stocks. The industry recently agreed to a new target for crude steel production set by the trade and Industry Ministry for the April to June period of 22.3 million tons, almost the same as the previous quarter. Crude steel production in February fell 7.8 percent from the previous month's total, the Japan Iron and Steel Federation reports.

Fed Still Easing Monetary Policy

NEW YORK, March 12 (NYT).—The Federal Reserve yesterday published figures showing that its monetary policy has been getting progressively easier. The monetary aggregates, which measure the availability of money and credit in the economy, generally showed accelerated rates of expansion.

The money supply, for example, averaged $217.7 billion in the four weeks ended March 3, which represented a 7.3 percent annual rate of growth in the last three months. By contrast, the money supply grew at a 5.1 percent rate from December, 1969, through January, 1971.

Total liabilities of Federal Reserve member banks—which are used as an approximative measure or "proxy" for total bank credit—grew at a 13.3 percent rate in the last three months against a 9.9 percent growth rate in actual total bank credit last year.

BIRD OF JOVE

By David Bruce. Putnam. 223 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

SOME men sit on top of a rocket and get shot to the moon; some sail the oceans of the world all alone in tiny ships; some drag themselves to the peaks of airless, cloud-shrouded mountains. And others make house companions of golden eagles. Or at least one did—Sam Barnes, outdoorsman and falconer, a Lancashire man who now lives in Wales. His friend is a rapacious bird of prey, with killer talons and a beak that can shred a man like an electric-powered buzzsaw—an enormous bird that in silhouette on the dust jacket of David Bruce's book looks like the Angel of Death.

That last phrase would not please Barnes, who trained, cosseted, nurtured and loves his proud, imperious companion. His particular eagle, which he acquired in person in the Kirghiz Republic of the Soviet Union, is a Berkut: a bird that hunts deer, wolves, tigers. His Berkut weighs more than 25 pounds, has a wingspread of more than nine feet and its grip on your arm will induce a cramp you will never confuse with tennis elbow. It flies high in the mountainous reaches of its native land, is quick to anger and ruthless in venting it. It's the last animal with which most of us would want to share our quarters, but Barnes was fascinated not only by the bird but also by the thought of training one.

Before one could be trained, it had to be secured and that was a job in itself. The Kirghiz tribes, who capture the Berkut eagles, evidently do not trade or sell them to Westerners. They were once restricted in use to emperors and kings and the Kirghizanians feel about their birds as some undergraduates do about their Greek letter fraternities; no one is going to get into their exclusive circle without their permission.

When Barnes first saw Atalanta, as she later came to be called, she was ill and close to death. Her Kirghiz owners, weighing her longevity against his desire, decided to let Barnes have her. He quickly cleared up her illness, but removing her from the Near East to Wales was something else again. It turns out that getting a golden eagle through various customs is far from easy. There is something about the animal that makes governments, to say nothing of customs inspectors, anxious. But Barnes eventually got her to his home. She was a great rarity since her kind had virtually died out in England.

She had had such a bad trip that Barnes not only had to train her to him, but also away from all she had suffered on her way over. He had definite ideas of what he wanted. He did not want a household pet, waddling around after him and barely able to get off the ground, nor did he want to train her through cruel practices as did the Kirghiz tribesmen. They would starve the birds to such a degree that the eagles would be insane with hunger as they started to hunt. Barnes wanted to keep her fed, satisfied and in tiptop condition. He wanted her to fly free, to hunt as her nature demanded and to return to him out of love. How he did so makes a thoroughly hypnotic and sometimes hair-raising interlude.

In the process a man picks up a great deal of eagle lore, on the care and feeding of the bird, on the training and furnishings such training requires. The most important ingredient is patience, patience and the strength of ten, but patience first. It means being able to match the bird's own stamina, of being as wary and as watchful, of being able to master the bird without punishing her. Their meetings were not without their hazards. For a while Barnes was in and out of the hospital so often that the doctors thought he was trying suicide by some long forgotten Near East method. And frequently it was just as tough on the bird.

If some people thought the eagle dangerous, what the eagle thought of man is not fit to print. Crowds eyed and tormented her; motor vehicles traveled up and down the road in a torrent of noise; the city council cocked a watchful and hostile eye. One deranged individual tried to beat her to death with stones; an exploding bomb, set by Welsh nationalists, almost drove her out of her mind; others with large dogs set their pets on the eagle without having the foggiest notion of what she could do to them. She was death itself to small game and other birds of all sizes. Mr. Bruce's chapter on how Atalanta disposed of two foxes who were raiding a rare species of duck is as fine a piece of nature writing as you will come across. Yet Atalanta would stand on a baby carriage, fiercely warning everyone away, while the child slept cosily inside.

After a while Barnes could read her moods like the weather. He understood her cries, knew how she changed with the seasons, knew what she required when she was moulting or nest building. In fact the bonds between them were so closely wound that when he was gone for any length of time, she turned ugly, would not allow herself to be handled and would not feed. In the air she was a glory, a nonpareil. The author deserves the thanks of all the citizenry who would never get a glimpse of her otherwise.

Mr. Lask is a book reviewer for The New York Times.

Rubens Work In Cache Found In Church Wall

MOSCOW, March 12 (Reuters). —A collection of 16th and 17th century paintings—including a work by Rubens—has been found hidden in walls of a cathedral in Kaunas, Lithuania.

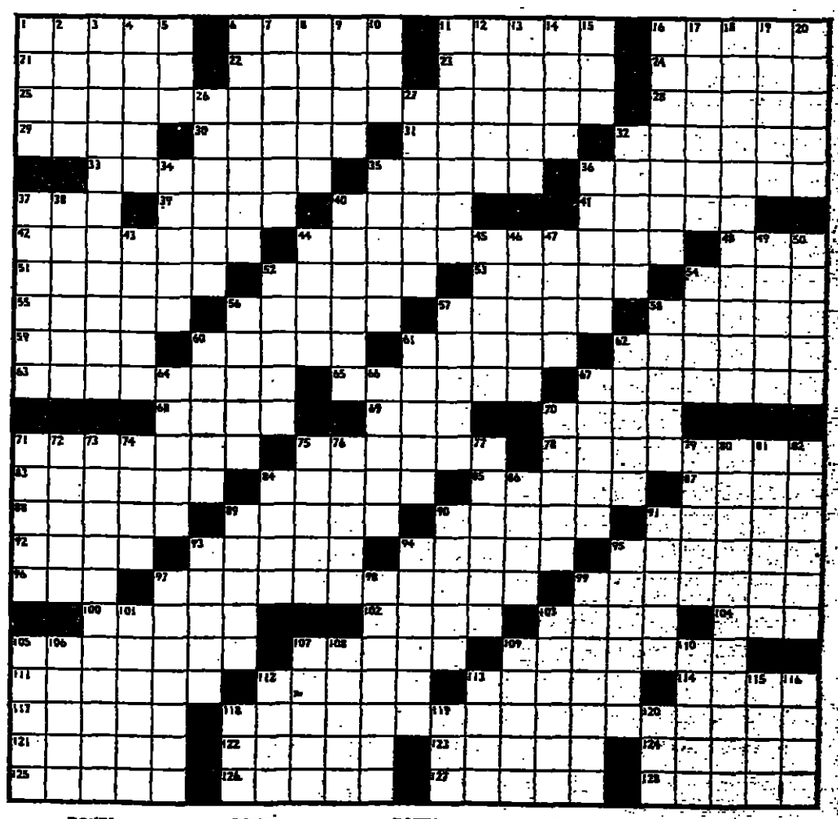

Tass said the find was made during restoration work. The 30 paintings were believed to have been hidden from the Nazis in 1943 and 1944 when they were removing works of art from occupied cities.

The Rubens, "Crucifixion," is painted in oil on oak, and is believed to be a fairly early work by him. Also among the finds was a work by Frans Snyders, entitled "Man with a Plate."

Faces Ashe-Lutz Match Victor

Rosewall Gains Aussie Final

YDNEY, March 12 (UPI).—ond-seeded Ken Rosewall of tralia gained the final of the ,000 Dunlop Australian Open nis tournament by beating Tom er of the Netherlands today, 7-6, 6-4, in 85 minutes. ewall will meet the winner of orrow night's match between Lutz of Los Angeles and ur Ashe of Gum Spring, Va., the final on Sunday.

Lutz overpowered tournament giant-killer Mark Cox of Britain, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2, in the quarterfinals and Ashe ousted South African Cliff Drysdale to reach the semi-finals. Cox had eliminated top-seeded Rod Laver of Australia.

Rosewall, 36, unleashed a string of magnificent backhand ground strokes and Okker shook his head at the brilliance of the placements.

A dejected Okker said afterward: "I volleyed very badly, perhaps because I was having trouble seeing the ball under lights."

Lutz was always firmly in control and dropped only one service during the match. He is best known as a doubles player, but the unseeded American is the surprise of the championships. In earlier rounds he disposed of eighth-seeded Spaniard Andres Gimeno and Britain's Roger Taylor, the No. 9 seed.

In the women's singles, Wimbledon champion Margaret Court of Australia advanced to the final by thrashing countrywoman Leslie Hunt, 6-0, 6-3.

Mrs. Court, who has won the title a record nine times, will meet the winner of tomorrow night's semifinal between Scotland's Winnie Shaw and Australian aborigine Evonne Goolagong.

'Red Sox' Petrocelli Sued for Million By Stewardess for Indecent Assault

NEW YORK, March 12 (AP).—Rico Petrocelli of the Boston Red Sox and the baseball club were sued for $1 million yesterday by a 24-year-old airline stewardess, who charged that the infielder assaulted her on a flight to Detroit last April.

Susanne Mondlin of Roosevelt, N.J., declared in papers filed in the State Supreme Court that while she was serving coffee to members of the Boston team aboard a charter flight to Detroit Petrocelli "wilfully and indecently assaulted her."

Mrs. Mondlin, who also is employed as a part-time model, said that Petrocelli placed his arms around her "from the back," grabbing her breasts with both hands. "She said she freed herself from his grasp and continued her duties. In the meantime, she said, Petrocelli returned to his seat for five minutes, cursed her and made threatening gestures toward her.

Later, the stewardess said, while she was serving soft drinks, Petrocelli kicked her leg, causing her to spill the drinks on him and other passengers.

Palmer Tied With Heard In Citrus Golf

ORLANDO, Fla., March 12 (NYT).—Arnold Palmer scored a six-under-par 66 in the opening round of the $150,000 Florida Citrus International tournament yesterday but had to share the lead with 23-year-old Jerry Heard.

Heard, who left Fresno State College because his golf game was "going downhill," rolled in a 35-foot birdie putt at the 18th green of the Rio Pinar Country Club course and gained the most prominent place he has ever held in three years on the pro circuit.

"I told my caddie when we had four holes to go that I wanted to catch Palmer," said Heard, who is from Visalia, Calif. Heard had eight birdies on his card and he described the final stroke that caused the deadlock as a "lagging putt that fell in."

Charlie Sifford was even with Palmer until the 17th, a par-3 hole, where his tee shot dropped onto a sandy path and he took a double bogey 5, dropping back to a 68.

John Lister, a 24-year-old New Zealand rookie on the tour, was also among the six tied at 67. The former clerk in a sheep and stock-raising firm is the current New Zealand PGA champion.

Julius Boros, a former United States Open champion who won the Citrus in 1967, had an "easy 67" with five birdies and 13 pars. Others who where five under par on this 6,849-yard layout were Dan Sikes, Dick Lotz, Bert Greene and Jerry McGee.

The Scoreboard

CYCLING—At Autun, France, Belgian Eddy Merckx increased his lead in the Paris-Nice race after momentarily losing the leader's white jersey to compatriot Eric Leman. Merckx led the field by three seconds at the start of the second stage—a lead which was wiped out by Leman when he picked up a six-second bonus with his second victory in two days in the first half-stage.

But Merckx had only loaned the jersey to Leman for the afternoon. In the second half-stage, a 4.7 kilometer (3 mile) time trial, he produced the fastest time by 11 seconds.

Richie Allen Dodges Ghosts of Past

By Ross Newhan

VERO BEACH, Fla., March 12—It was on a recent afternoon after the initial workout of the new spring, and Richard Anthony Allen seemed free of the ghosts of his past.

"For the first time in a long time, I know I don't have to run and hide every time the door opens," Allen said as he sat in the old clubhouse.

"I have this beautiful feeling that the players and people of Los Angeles are anxious to accept Rich Allen, ballplayer.

"My reputation—and I'm here to say that most of it isn't so—doesn't seem to matter.

"I mean I was even on trial in St. Louis last year. Every move was suspect. Now I'm made to feel like my reputation is behind me."

Allen took off the gray jersey with the lettering "Dodgers" across the front and he laughed.

"Let me tell you just how far the Dodgers have gone to make me feel a part of this team," he said. "When we landed they gave me a package of Florida products. It even included suntan lotion."

It is the first glow of spring, not the dog days of August. The cynics say beware. They say that Allen's attitude will change. It usually does.

"The six years in Philadelphia were an awfully good education," said Allen. "Believe me, I know the opportunity that I have here.

New Life

"It's generated a new life for me and my family. We love Los Angeles."

The man who is now 29 years old, who set a league record for fines when he was with the Phillies, came to the Los Angeles Dodgers in a trade that sent Ted Sizemore to St. Louis.

Allen, who still owns a home in Philadelphia, moved his family into a Los Angeles apartment in January. He worked out at Dodger Stadium three times a week. He volunteered to play in a medical benefit game. He signed autographs and chatted amiably with strangers when he visited Santa Anita racetrack, a passion he compares with other men's interest in golf.

Generally a holdout, Allen was in uniform one hour prior to the first L.A. workout of the spring. A $105,000 contract long since signed, he drilled at third base and in the outfield and he cracked line drives against the pitching machine for more than an hour.

When asked of his impressions of Dodgertown, he said, "Well, it's Zero Beach, all right, but it looks like the perfect place to train.

"In fact, this whole thing is what I've always thought the big leagues would be like.

"I feel like I did when I was a rookie. For the first time since '63 I feel I have a chance to contribute, to be judged by what I do on the field rather than having it all weighed against my reputation.

"I really have never been this confident. I don't know how well I'll do or how well we'll do, but I know my heart will be in it."

He is, of course, the heart of a new offense. The Dodgers hit 87 home runs last year. Allen hit 34 for the Cardinals. He drove in 101 runs.

"Actually," he confided, "I was disgusted with what I did last year. Maybe I should say I just didn't get the opportunity that I should have. I was pitched around and in many instances those situations were set up because my teammates were more interested in themselves than the team.

"I don't want to make it a personal thing, but the Cardinals misused the very fundamentals that the Dodgers use so well.

"I mean I see here a chance to play for a winner—and being a winner is the one thing I'd like to be accused of."

Bruin 'Glad It's Over'

Esposito Unexcited As Records Tumble

LOS ANGELES, March 12 (AP).—For the first man ever to score 100 points in a National Hockey League season, it was just another record. Phil Esposito has been around for eight years and is getting harder and harder to excite.

"I'm glad it's over," he said calmly last night after scoring his 59th and 60th goals against his cross-country cousins, the Los Angeles Kings. The score of the game, almost hidden by the number of records set, was 7-2 in favor of the Boston Bruins.

"Well, with 11 games left after this one," he smiled, "I knew that sooner or later I'd get it. But I've been fortunate against Los Angeles and I like playing here. I'm just glad the pressure's off."

Esposito, who had tied Bobby Hull's two-year-old season mark of 58 goals the night before, now has 11 goals and eight assists in five games against the Kings, with 11 season games left, Esposito said he would be satisfied with a 65-goal total.

Beliveau Eclipsed

The 60th goal also broke a record. Jean Beliveau of Montreal had scored 59 in the regular season and playoffs for a record 15 years ago. Esposito also has 128 points, most in NHL history and two more than his former mark.

Bobby Orr also got into the act, breaking the record of assists for a defenseman in a season. Orr got three assists to boost him to 88, one more than he had a year ago.

He also scored a goal, giving him 123 points for the year and propelling him three over his own record total of last season.

Canucks 7, Red Wings 3

Vancouver leftwinger Ted Taylor scored one goal and got credit for a second when Detroit defenseman Jim Niekamp tipped the puck into his own net as the Canucks won, 7-3, at home.

The East German squad trounced Austria, 11-3, at Lyss. Poland beat Norway, 8-1, at Berne, and Yugoslavia tied Italy, 4-4, at Berne. The standings after five rounds:

At Boston, Boston University overpowered Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in the quarterfinal round of the ECAC playoffs, running its season won-lost-tied record to 25-1-1. In other quarterfinals, Cornell beat Providence at Ithica, N.Y., 6-3; Clarkson defeated Pennsylvania, 5-2, at Potsdam, N.Y., and Harvard edged Brown, 4-3, at Cambridge, Mass.

BASKETBALL—At Moscow, the Soviet Central Army Sports Club reached the final of the European Cup of Cups by beating Slavia of Prague, 94-87, in their second leg semifinal. Slavia won the first leg, 83-68.

At Badalona, Spain, Spartak of Leningrad gained the finals of the European Cup of Cups competition. Badalona's 62-49 victory at home failed to offset the Russian 85-52 triumph at Leningrad as the Soviet squad prevailed, 131-114, on total points.

WEIGHTLIFTING — At Rostov-on-Don, Russia, Dito Shanidze, 22-year-old Russian Olympic silver medallist, broke the world record for the jerk in the featherweight division. At 153.5 kilograms (338 1/4 pounds).

Brundage: FIS Trying 'Blackmail'

LAUSANNE, Switzerland, March 12 (AP).—Avery Brundage, 83-year-old president of the International Olympic Committee, said today: "We will not be held to blackmail by the International Ski Federation (FIS).

Brundage made the comment in an interview. He is in Lausanne for executive board meetings of the IOC tomorrow and Sunday which may determine the future of Alpine skiing.

"We should get a positive feeling here in Lausanne," Brundage said. "But if the executive board is divided, then the matter will have to go to the full IOC congress in Luxembourg in September."

FIS president Marc Hodler has said that if the IOC throws out ten skiers for attending a commercial camp at Mammouth Mountain, Calif., last summer, then he'll pull all skiers out of the Sapporo Winter Olympics and stage a separate championship.

Brundage's remarks about blackmail referred to Hodler's statement.

Duvillard Unhurt After Ski Mishap

AARE, Sweden, March 12 (AP).—Faint French hopes for the Alpine skiing World Cup were almost extinguished late today when second-place Henry Duvillard got his skis and a leg caught in the undercarriage of the Aare mountain trolley car.

Duvillard, 23, who trails Italian Gustavo Thoeni by 20 points, 155-135, before tomorrow's giant slalom, was not injured in the incident. He is the only skier with a chance to catch Thoeni.

On Sunday a men's special slalom and a women's giant slalom end the World Cup competition. Anne-Marie Proell of Austria already has clinched the women's title.

Wales XV Tries To Clinch Title Tie

CARDIFF, Wales, March 12 (AP).—Wales attempts to clinch a tie for the title in the Five Nations rugby tournament in a match against Ireland tomorrow.

A Welsh victory at Arms Park Stadium would set the stage for the game between France and Wales in Paris two weeks hence to be decisive. France would then need a victory to share the title with Wales for the second straight year. The two countries are co-leaders at four points each but Wales has played one game less.

N.C. State Minus Top Scorer Upsets Duke in ACC Tourney

GREENSBORO, N.C., March 12 P).—One month ago, when his rth Carolina State basketball am was in the throes of an onizing stretch of ineptitude, olfpack coach Norman Sloan shook his head sadly and said. "It's driving me nuts. I don't know what's wrong. We have the talent but we're playing bad basketball."

Tonight Sloan's team minus scoring leader Ed Leftwich faces South Carolina, the sixth-ranked team in the nation, in the semi-finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference championship tournament.

The aroused Wolfpack upset the Duke Blue Devils last night with an inspired second-half comeback for a 89-81 first-round victory. Second-seeded South Carolina had earlier polished off Maryland, 71-63.

In the semifinal opener tonight, North Carolina, 76-41 conqueror of Clemson, meets Virginia, survivor of an 85-84 shootout with Wake Forest.

The winner of tomorrow night's title game enters the NCAA Eastern Regionals at Raleigh, N.C., next Thursday night.

Virginia has a 15-10 won-lost record, North Carolina is 21-5, South Carolina is 21-4, and North Carolina State is 13-13.

Woeful Wolfpack

The woeful Wolfpack had lost six of its last seven games before it met a Duke team that had climbed to 19th in the nation by winning its last eight games.

To complicate matters, Leftwich, who said he had "personal problems," was dropped from the team last weekend and sharp-shooter sophomore reserve Bill Benson left school because of academic difficulties.

Duke shot 58 percent in the first half to lead by seven points. But shooting fell off to 33 percent in the last half as Randy Denton scored only four points after a 16-point first half.

The players who had done the job all year came through again for South Carolina in its hard-earned victory over Maryland. John Roche and Tom Owens each scored 18 points and the 6-foot-10 Owens collared 15 rebounds.

Pole Vault Tops Europe Track

SOFIA, March 12 (AP).—The second European indoor track and field championships open tomorrow with about 300 athletes from 23 nations expected to compete.

The teams of West Germany, Russia and East Germany are expected to dominate.

The pole vault shapes up as the top event of the two-day meet. Four of the world's top vaulters are here: world outdoor record holder Chris Papanicolaou of Greece, world indoor record champion Kjell Isaksson of Sweden, former record holder Wolfgang Nordwig of East Germany and France's François Tracanelli.

Papanicolaou is participating in his first international meet since he set the world outdoor mark of 5.49 meters at a local competition in Athens last fall. He will be out to break Isaksson's record of 5.38 meters set at an indoor meet in Los Angeles last month.

Liquori Tries Double

DETROIT, March 12 (NYT).—Figuring that two second-place finishes may be better than one first place, especially with his school scrambling for a team title, Marty Liquori will try the difficult one-mile and two-mile double tonight and tomorrow in the National Collegiate Indoor Track and Field championships.

Only one runner, Jim Ryun of Kansas, has ever swept both distance races at this meet in the same year, 1968. The following year Ryun's bid for two titles ended in failure and controversy when he dropped out of the two-mile (complaining of blisters) and returned the following afternoon to beat Liquori of Villanova in a thrilling mile.

Beltoise Isn't Alone In Giunti Death Blame

GENEVA, March 12.—French racing driver Jean-Pierre Beltoise does not have to shoulder all the blame for the death of Italian driver Ignacio Giunti in a Buenos Aires race accident, Grand Prix Drivers' Association President Joachim Bonnier said today.

Bonnier, head of an investigation into the Jan. 10 collision, said Beltoise was at fault for pushing his car on the track—allowable under international rules only to remove the vehicle from danger. But he said track officials were at fault for not stopping Beltoise and Giunti was partly to blame for failing to reduce his speed at the yellow caution flags signaling danger ahead.

Morning Line: Up Front

By Bernard Kirsch
IHT Sports Editor

PARIS, March 12.—Paris is not Canastota and Billy Backus thinks he might be able to use some help. Well, here I am.

The Bronx (N.Y.) raises some tough people but my mother never let me cross the street alone until I was 13.

Kirsch

By the time Backus was 13, he had walked up and down Canastota's Canal Street, along the Erie Canal, without fear.

"Male or female, everyone on that street was interested in boxing," someone once said.

By the time Backus was 28, he had expanded to welterweight champion of the world. After an apprenticeship that carried him to exotic Coaltown and Scranton, Pa., where he was forced to face the local tigers, Backus took the welterweight crown by stopping Jose Napoles in the fourth round in Syracuse, N.Y., a short drive from Canastota.

Non-Title Bout

But that was last Dec. 3. Monday night at the Palais des Sports here, Backus fights outside the United States for the first time. In a ten-round non-title match, he meets Robert Gallois, the universe's eighth-ranked welterweight, according to the World Boxing Council, and a boxer who doesn't lose too often in France, except when he's fighting another Frenchman.

And that is what scares Backus and his manager, Tony Graziano (no relationship to Rocky). "I don't want to leave it (the fight) to a decision," said Graziano, as he and Billy sat in their hotel room. "You have to be afraid of a decision here. You boys going to be at the fight?" Graziano asked this Bronx boy and another Brooklyn (N.Y.) toughie from The New York Times.

"We'll be there except I'm not sure where'll we'll be sitting," said Brooklyn.

"Hey Philippé," said Graziano to a fifth party in the room, a representative and interpreter for the Palais des Sports, "these boys get front-row seats, ringside seats or we don't fight Monday night. Hey, I'm serious. You just make sure they get them those seats or there's no fight."

Ah, the sweet power of us journalists who are known for our objectivity. It was only this Wednesday that the daily L'Equipe, the bible for French sports, had a story by their boxing writer calling the Muhammad Ali (known as Cassius Clay in France)-Joe Frazier fight the worst heavyweight title fight of the last 25 years.

So Monday night, along with Mr. Brooklyn, I'll be at the Palais, possibly the only two reporters who will file incisive stories for American papers. It's nice to be wanted. "In case anything happens, you can tell them back in Syracuse what really happened," said Graziano.

It's not that Backus can't lose—in fact, he quit the ring in 1965 after three straight losses put his won-lost-drawn record at 9-6-2, but he is a solid boxer who throws jolting lefts and rights from his southpaw stance. Since his comeback began in 1967, he's 23-3-1.

Wild and Wooly

To revive their confidence, Brooklyn and I told Graziano and Backus some stories out of the wild and wooly past. There was the one about Fraser Scott of Seattle, a good middleweight who once lost a tough middleweight championship struggle to Nino Benvenuti in Italy.

Scott came to Paris recently to box local favorite Max Cohen at the Palais. In about the fourth round of a fairly even bout, Cohen did some damage to Scott's eye and there was a little swelling, nothing serious, though. Scott's manager applied some vaseline between rounds on the cut. The referee thought there was too much and wiped it off.

The following morning the phone in my pad rings and it is Scott's manager. "Did you see the way the ref wiped my fighter's eye," he asked. "Man, he just took the dried part of a towel and wiped my man's eyes as hard as he could." The fight was stopped in the fifth because of cuts over Scott's eye.

Another Tale

Then we told Graziano and Backus about how Ricky Porter once said after he fought Marcel Cerdan that, "If I would have won all ten rounds I would have had to knock him out to beat him here."

"You just make sure these boys are there at ringside," Graziano told Philippé. "In fact, I want you to call right now." There was no one available.

If he needs it, which Backus should not, he could always call for some help from his corner, where uncle Carmen Basilio will be. Basilio is a former welterweight and middleweight champ, also out of the Canastota school. And, of course, the No. 1 similarity between uncle and nephew is both are tough-nosed fighters and very little scares them in the ring. As columnist Red Smith once wrote: "One thing about the Basilios, they're fist fighters and they don't pretend to be bankers or lawyers or clergymen."

Not even if the family name is Backus.

A Speechless U.S.

WASHINGTON.—My friend S.J. Michelson, a registered ghost-writer who works out of New York City, has just added a new terror to those that have been predicted for the 1980s. S.J. predicts that in ten years from now there will be a famine in speakers the likes of which the United States has never seen.

Buchwald

S.J. told me. "This country is using up rhetoric twice as fast as it can be reproduced, and if we keep wasting our speakers as we are doing now, we could find ourselves speechless by 1985."

Citing scientific data, S.J. said. "There were 11,198 prepared and extemporaneous speeches delivered last year in New York City, not counting TV appearances by Mayor John Lindsay.

"Ten years ago there were only 4,506. By 1980 the demand for speeches by Rotary Clubs alone will be 23,897. Even with a new crop of politicians, radical students and women's lib activists, it will be impossible to supply one quarter of the requests for speakers in ten years from now."

I asked S.J. how he explained the escalating demand for speakers.

"This is a country that thrives on meetings. Three Americans can't have breakfast, lunch or dinner together without booking a speaker to address them. We are holding more conventions, more protest meetings, and more fund-raising events than anytime in our history. People have no solutions to any of the problems we face so they demand supposed experts to solve their problems for them.

"Unfortunately the more complicated our problems become, the more meetings we hold, and the fewer experts we have to go around.

"For example, in any given night in this country there are 5,679 Republican fund-raising dinners going on. At the same time there is only one Spiro Agnew. Everyone knows you can spread Spiro Agnew just so far."

"But surely there must be a lot of new speakers coming up to fill the needs of the country," I protested.

"That's just the point. The younger generation which we were counting on to help out can't talk."

"What do you mean they can't talk?"

"The new generation can't verbalize. They've been listening to rock music since they were born and watching television since they were 3, and it's impossible for them to complete a sentence, much less deliver a speech. The reason so many of your radical students use four-letter words these days is that they don't know the correct word to use in expressing a thought."

"But surely the government can supply speakers to prevent this catastrophe," I said.

S.J. shook his head. "Unfortunately no one believes anything anyone in the government says these days. They won't even book someone from the government for prayer, breakfasts anymore."

I told S.J., "You paint a bleak picture."

"It's even worse than I have painted it," he said. "Because of the economic squeeze, the networks are replacing more and more of their entertainment programs with talk shows. Every speaker in this country will soon be booked for television to plug his book and will be unable to take any speaking dates."

"What can we do to stem the tide?" I asked.

S.J. said, "The only answer is to send all able-bodied persons on welfare out on the lecture circuit. If they want to eat they should be able to sing for their supper."

Fewer Restaurants In British Guide

LONDON, March 12 (UPI).—Falling standards of cuisine in restaurants in Britain resulted in a sharp fall in the numbers mentioned in the 1971 Good Food Guide, the Consumers' Association, which published the guide, said today.

Only 1,165 places are recommended, compared with 1,634 in the last edition.

"We have raised our own standards, while most restaurateurs have been lowering theirs," said the new editor, Christopher Driver.

George C. Scott: 'I Don't Like Being Used as a Freak'

NERJA, Spain.—Ten years ago George C. Scott caused a minor flurry when he refused an Oscar nomination for Best Supporting Actor on the grounds that "I don't like that meat market situation." When Scott was nominated for this year's Best Actor Academy Award for "Patton," he naturally tried to refuse again, but this time the flurry was major: such distinguished Academicians as Gregory Peck have chastised him, Time magazine is rushing out a cover story on him, eager suitors from the entertainment world are crowding all aircraft headed for Malaga. It's all like wow.

Silly, isn't it? Scott, deep into a vodka and beer and a nasty case of flu, gives a small smile. "All things are possible in this life and this business," he says. "There is a certain irony," he adds. There is indeed a certain irony in one of the world's great screen actors getting so much attention not for acting but just for sending a telegram.

Stringent

"I always appear as a wild-eyed fanatic," Scott says. He is a soft-spoken, anguished man. "I'm very stringent. It's a strong point of my professional makeup," he says. "I wish it were a part of my personal makeup." Another small smile. It is cold and stormy and Malaga airport is submerged. "Another perfect day on the Coast of the Sun," says Scott.

George C. Scott is on Spain's Costa del Sol to play a gangster on the lam in "The Last Run," which Carter De Haven is producing for MGM. Main shooting is being done in and around Nerja, a formerly unspoiled port, now all old stucco and new cinder-blocks, located in what a gastronomic map of Spain harrowingly describes as the Region of Fried Food. Co-starred in the film are Trish Van Devere, Tony Musante, and a grey 1957 BMW-503 convertible which Scott, as a semi-retired Chicago wheel man, drives at high speed over Spain's more alarming roads.

"It's an old-fashioned adventure picture," Scott says. "It's a kind of a Bogart part—the lonely, separated man trying to make a comeback. It's the kind of thing that people can enjoy."

"The Last Run" was directed by John Huston until disagreements, especially about the script, led to Huston's replacement by the less glittering but famously efficient Richard Fleischer, a director who will have no fewer than three new films on release in 1971.

Tempo

Despite the loss of time during the changeover, the film is only a few days over schedule. "The tempo is set by the cameraman's tempo," Fleischer says. "The Last Run's" cameraman is Sven Nykvist, famed for his work with Ingmar Bergman. "Sven is the fastest lighting cameraman I've ever seen. I work the way I usually do, I've just had more time to do it in."

Making a movie, says Fleischer, is like doing a jigsaw puzzle—"there's no picture until you put the last piece in." He finds Scott a consummate actor. "He needs so little guidance, yet if you give him some help he's grateful. All you need do is be a traffic cop with him. He has camera sense—few actors do."

George Campbell Scott, who was born in Virginia, who was a journalist before making his acting debut in Missouri and who now lives in Westchester County, N.Y., measures his work only by the plays he has been in. The Scott performance he is most satisfied with is his Shylock, which he played in Central Park.

George C. Scott in "The Last Run"

"The commercial theater is the only effective crucible in which to operate," he says. "Theater is the actor's medium. The other media are not." He is fastidious in preparing his roles but suspicious of acting schools and teachers:

"No one's ever told me how to act. I've stolen from every actor I've ever admired and rejected a thousand things. It's a continuous learning process.

"You have to accept that you're not in command," he says of films. "A lot of actors say, 'I'm pushed here and shoved there,' and it's true." Still, the amount of pushing Scott will take is limited: he expects to be listened to and he wants people to understand that he is behaving responsibly "no matter how bizarre or aberrational it may seem."

A constant worker, Scott filmed "Jane Eyre" between "Patton" and "The Last Run" and in April will make a film in New York, after which he will direct his wife, Colleen Dewhurst, in a Broadway play, after which he will act on Broadway in a Neil Simon play, after which he will direct his first film.

"I sit around more than two weeks, I get nervous," he says. "I drink off a week, that's enough."

Awards

For all the noise about this year's Oscars, George C. Scott makes it plain he is not against all awards:

"I have nothing against anyone in any profession being honored by their peers. The other awards do it and get it over. They decide, and then it comes out that Joe Bosotz won. Great. What I dislike is making a two-hour television spectacular out of it.

"Putting actors in competition with each other—that should never be. Actors work together, it's the nature of their jobs. Those close-ups of the wife crying and all that horseshit, I won't be a party to it.

"I am a commercial actor. I enjoy being paid and I earn my money. But I don't like being used as a freak," Scott said. "And I don't like it for my colleagues." He sounded neither wild-eyed nor bizarre nor aberrational. He sounded right.

PEOPLE: Neither Shaken Nor Stirred

The yo-yo, just about at the end of its string only a year ago, has made an inexplicable comeback this winter to become once again one of the U.S. toy industry's biggest money-spinners of early 1971. Hundreds of thousands of the little whipper-snappers already have been air-freighted to the South, the West Coast, "and for some damn reason Iowa and Nebraska, where people shouldn't be yo-yo-minded at all," says Sales Manager Wilfred Schlee of the Union Wadding Co., one of the Big Two of yo-yodom. William R. Sauey, president of Flambeau Plastics, further predicts 1971 sales of nine million yo-yos—quadruple those of 1970—ranging from the plain 39-cent variety through the Twinkling U-U, with bells and lights, at $2.50 (which breaks down, according to our calculations, to a buck-and-a-quarter per yo) to a $7 jobbie (see photo) that, Lord save us, mixes martinis.

For the above information we are indebted to Margaret Crimmins, a Washington Post writer whose in-depth report on the yo-yo turns out to be unequalled in the annals of journalism. "The yo-yo principle," continues Miss C., "is believed to have originated in the Philippines as a primitive weapon," a thonged stone thrown to zap someone and return to the zapper. "It's name," said a Philippines Embassy spokesman, "describes the movement, probably in the Tagalog dialect." The toy was introduced into the U.S. in 1928, but way back "in the 18th century, King George IV lounged around with a yo-yo (then called a bandalore) strung from a fat finger," while "Louis XVIII posed for an anonymous 18th-century painter with the yo-yo's forerunner, which the French called l'émigrette."

"One account of French history," continues our expert, "describes a group of condemned noblemen yo-yoing their way up to the guillotine." This latter image is equaled, perhaps, only by Miss Crimmins's further revelation that "The ancient Greeks yo-yoed in their togas," a footnote to history which conveys a pretty fair idea of the voluminousness of this classic garment.

Interviewing sports figures, we have found, is often a hazardous business, demanding an ear particularly sensitive to the jargon. Like, "Half-a-Nelson" we understand after several years on the rassling circuit, but we still sympathize with the writer who felt constrained this week to interrupt a monolog by Seattle boxing promoter George Chemeres to ask somewhat sheepishly, "What's a 'Half-a-David'?" "You know," said Chemeres. "One of those legal papers you move things with."

A vibrating brassiere stole the show at yesterday's opening of Brussels's 20th "International Exhibition of Inventors." "Instead of the usual textile cups," reports the AP, "the buzzing bra, designed by a Mrs. Malrait, of Belgium, has metal structures which spiral around the breasts and fasten at the back. In the center is a small electric vibrator which . . . is said to strengthen and develop the bust." Co-starring with the bra is a French-made "electronic artificial arm with a hand powered by five motors which, it is claimed, can do anything a real arm and hand can do." Sure, but can it buzz?

Ex aequo for Crook-of-the-Month honors are a trio of ne'er-do-wells who gave it, you must admit, the old college try:

● In Heanor, England, reports UPI, two otherwise unidentified 17-year-olds, handcuffed together for a short stroll from jail to court, made a break for it but were recaptured when they attempted to run around a lamp post, one on each side.

● In Giza, Egypt, meanwhile, detectives arrested one Ibrahim Yunis, an enterprising young shopkeeper, who had purchased the accumulated booty of three local house-breakers, marked up the wares for a modest profit, and displayed them in his store window under a prominent sign reading: "Stolen Goods For Sale."
